P. M'CARROLL.
Our Ministry is steering right, which every one can see—
Not drawing money from the banks, but there will be be;
A splendid stroke of statesmanship to keep the vessel trim,
And hold her clear of icebergs, and safely make her swim.
To call the public money in, a crisis it might bring;
Our Premier and his colleagues will think of no such thing.
The banks lend out that money, giving sinews to our lands,
To squatters, to selectors, and to men of every grade;
Instead of pumping out our strength, as such a course would bring,
Most happily what is proposed, is quite another thing.
Three millions they will borrow, its power and strength to spread,
In public works and railways, all of which will go ahead.
Give labour through the country, to thousands for some years,
And cast away from timid minds, their present doubts and fears;
This is a bold, a master stroke, in judgment clear and sound,
In all our own self-government, its like cannot be found.
If change of blood is always good, as every one will say,
The change found in our Ministry shines brightly out to-day;
And while they steer the ship of State, and handle her so well,
M'CARROLL and the country's for his colleagues and Farnell!

LATER NEWS BY THE ACONCAGUA,

VIA THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE

A PORTION of the papers brought by the Aconcagua, of the Orient line, arrived in Sydney by overland post yesterday morning. They furnish us with eight days later news and supply the following additional intelligence. The European dates are to the 18th May:—

VISIT OF THE QUEEN TO ALDERSHOTT.

On May 13, the camp at Aldershott was honoured by a long visit from her Majesty, who spent some hours at the Royal pavilion, and in the afternoon reviewed the whole of the division on the North Camp ground. Last year, during the summer manœuvres, the Queen visited the troops when they were encamped on Ascot Common, and on the following day inspected them in Windsor Park; but for several years her Majesty has come annually to Aldershott, and her visit to the chief camp of the empire is always an event of peculiar interest. Yesterday's visit was rendered the more so because of the recent strengthening of the Aldershott battalions by the seasoned troops of the First Reserve. "Rumours of wars" always have their marked effect on the professional soldier, and warlike enthusiasm is very catching in camps and garrisons. One has only to walk through Aldershott at the present moment if he would satisfy himself of this, and the spirit manifested by the 15,000 or 16,000 men in camp there may fairly be taken as an exemplification of that which animates the entire of the British army. There were indications yesterday that, if in the divisional orders a very stringent injunction against marking respect for the Sovereign by any other means than saluting had not been republished and circulated through the camp, the troops would have displayed an enthusiasm which, while thoroughly English, might not have been altogether in keeping with "the rules and regulations" of military discipline. As it was, the bearing of the whole division was in every respect most satisfactory, and Sir Thomas Steele, its commander, may be congratulated on the spectacle which the Queen and many thousands of her civilian subjects witnessed on the parade ground.

The opinion generally expressed among the military men who witnessed the review from the enclosures was that a finer set of men than those who were then inspected by the Queen have rarely, if ever, been seen at Aldershott, and that the marching was excellent. Lord Napier of Magdala, accompanied by Colonel Dillon, his military secretary, was among the distinguished officers who attended as spectators.

ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE THE EMPEROR OF GERMANY.

On the afternoon of the 11th May, about half-past 3, an attempt was made on the life of the Emperor William, while returning from a drive. The full name of the would-be assassin is Heinrich Max Hödel, usually called Lehmann. He was born at Leipsic on the 27th of May, 1857, is a journeyman tinsmith, and has been staying at Berlin only a short time. When firing the first shot he stood on the footpath of Unter den Linden, and then ran to the other side of the street, where the trees are, threw himself on the ground, fired a second shot, and, missing, again took to flight, firing twice more at the bystanders. He ran a few paces, was pursued, and opposite the Schadow-strasse was arrested by several gentlemen and the Emperor's chasseur. At his first examination at the Mittel-strasse police office he said that he was starving, and that he had determined to kill himself and impress the rich with a sense of their duty towards the poor. It seems he attempted to deny having fired at the Emperor at all. He, however, called himself a member of the Anarchical Party, admitted having called and presided over Socialistic meetings at Leipsic, and had Socialistic literature and portraits in his possession. He is a tall, slim young man, of good looks and resolute appearance. Besides Hödel Lehmann, the public arrested on the spot one Gustav Krüger, a labouring man, who protected Hödel from the wrath of the bystanders.

The German Emperor received thousands of telegrams from all parts of the world congratulating him on his fortunate escape. He has sent a message to the German Parliament expressing his thanks for its manifestation of sympathy. It is now believed that Hödel had an accomplice. He seems to have borne a very indifferent character.

The examination of Hödel took place in presence of the Minister of the Interior, Dr. Lock, the Procurator-General-in-Chief, and Dr. Tessendorf, the Procurator-General, Dr. Johl, Councillor to the Municipal Tribunal, conducted the investigation. The prisoner is a native of Leipsic, and was born in 1857. He stated that he lodged at widow Bruter's house in the Stallschreiberstrasse. A domiciliary visit was paid there by the police, which led to the discovery of various socialistic writings. Hödel denied having fired at the Emperor, and also asserted that he had only fired one shot. He affirmed that he was without work, and that it was his intention to shoot himself publicly at Unter den Linden, for the purpose of showing the rich the present condition of the people and whither it led. He alleges that he fired one shot at himself, and could not account for the other three shots which were wanting in the chambers of the revolver. He thought he might have discharged them in absence of mind. The prisoner was in possession of several socialistic-democratic writings, tickets of membership of several Berlin socialistic-democratic unions, and the likenesses of the socialist leaders, Herren Bebel and Liebknecht. He declared, during the examination, that he belonged to no political party, but that he was an Anarchist and enemy of all political parties and the present condition of society and public institutions. It further results from the investigation that Hödel formerly held Socialistic meetings in Schkenditz, near Leipsic. The second prisoner, Krüger, appears to be innocent, and is said to have been set at liberty. He had incurred suspicion because he had endeavoured to protect Hödel against the assaults of the excited public which had laid hands on the culprit. All the morning journals contain reports testifying to the unanimously patriotic demonstrations of the population, and warmly expressing the general sentiment of profound veneration entertained towards his Majesty. Telegrams congratulating the Emperor on his escape are continually arriving from German Princes and European Sovereigns. The Grand Duke of Baden is expected to arrive here to-morrow for the purpose of personally congratulating his Majesty. The Emperor received the members of the Royal family, who congratulated his Majesty upon his escape. The Emperor attended with them divine service in the Cathedral, and subsequently received the Field-Marshals General and the Generals. At a quarter to 1 he received the German Crown Prince, who was at the head of the members of the Ministry, who came to offer their congratulations.

To-night's Official Gazette of Berlin has the following quotation:—"The deed of a misguided man, who apparently aimed at my life, so long protected by God's gracious providence, has occasioned numerous manifestations of loyal attachment to be offered to me, which have deeply moved and gladdened my heart. Not only in all Germany, but also in foreign countries, authorities, corporations, societies, and persons of all ranks, classes, and ages, have hastened to proclaim that the heart of the people is with its Emperor and King, and that the nation sympathises with me in good and evil days. In Berlin, I read this sympathy in every eye into which I have looked since the incident. I was deeply affected by the sincere and noble feeling displayed by the population of the capital. I am anxious that every one who has shown me his sympathy should know that he has gladdened my heart. I therefore charge you to make public the preceding.—WILLIAM.—Berlin, May 14, 1878.—To the Chancellor of the Empire."

It is reported that, in view of the attack made upon the Emperor, the Government has resolved to propose, or even to introduce by administrative decree, serious restrictions on the freedom of the Press and the right of public meeting. Efforts will, it is said, be made to bring about a common action on the part of Germany, Russia, England, the United States and other countries, where Socialistic or Communistic symptoms have lately appeared.

THE WAR AT THE CAPE.

A portion of our despatches by the steamship Aconcagua having come to hand by post yesterday, we are enabled to give later intelligence concerning the troublesome frontier war at the Cape of Good Hope. Our dates are to the 11th June.

The following correspondence has been published in the Independent, a newspaper issued at Kimberley, in Griqualand West:—Griqua Town, May 23, 1878. We got here quite safe on Monday morning, after travelling night and day through rain and mud. We kept getting despatches on the road to hurry on, as every moment was of importance. When we started we had no idea of having to fight at Griqua Town. On Sunday morning we sent out a patrol of sixteen men, and the Griquas tried to cut them off, but when they found that was impossible they hoisted a white flag. Mr. Roper went down to them, and it seems they wanted peace. Mr. Roper offered them peace if they would give up Piet Jonas, Willem Moss, and three of the other head men, but they would not do that. So, on Wednesday thirty-five of us went on patrol, and when we got down to the kloof they tried to cut us off, but we feigned retreating fast, and met them nicely. That was at 9 o'clock in the morning. That was my "baptism of fire." We had hot firing on both sides. At last the blacks retired into a house close by, with a lot of mud walls round. There they stuck the whole day firing at us. At half-past 1 Captain Doveton (elected captain on the spot for his bravery) and five of his men charged a hole and killed five niggers, one of whom was Willem Moss, their commandant. Colonel Lanyon shot Piet Jonas, their captain. From there the firing got dull, only a long shot being fired now and then without much damage.

At about 5 o'clock the Zulu police came in from Kimberley. We sent them down to the garden walls, and then the captain of the Kimberley contingent asked, "Are you all ready for a charge at the house." We answered, "We are." Then came the contest. We charged the first garden wall (the Kimberley One-Star contingent with eight colonial police), we shot ten by the first and took one prisoner. In that Phil Shepherd got two of his fingers shot off. We charged on and on further, till we reached the last; that was the kraal with loopholes full of niggers. It was already dusk. Captain M'Kenna said, "Will you charge that kraal or leave it?" We all said "charge." In we went, helter-skelter, firing and receiving fire all the time. One policeman got shot through the fleshy part of the leg. We killed every one in the kraal; some jumped over the wall, but that did not help them; one came pleading to W. D. T. for mercy, and he gave him mercy between the eyes with a blue pill. Colonel Lanyon came up from Koegas the same morning with a few of his men, not knowing we were here. It was dark when the last was shot, so we were rather tired and hungry when we got to camp. As we were riding home we gave three cheers for the colonel; in reply he said he was very proud to be in command of such a body of men. We captured eighteen horses, saddles, and bridles, and as many guns as niggers shot—fifty, I believe. Last night Captain McKenna said we were able to say we were soldiers now instead of recruits. The police from the colony say they were in hot fights down at Perie Bush, but it was nothing to this; so it must have been hot. I felt funny at first, but that went over very soon. Bullets struck around us like bees around their hive. Mr. McKenna shot one in the forehead, and as he was dropping he pulled the trigger in his dying moments, but did no damage. I never thought of home or anything else during the day; but when I got to bed my thoughts took me home. I was not wishing for home though. A patrol of the Kimberley Light Horse has just gone out again. I don't know what the result will be. I was on sentry this morning from one to three. By jingo! it was cold. P.S.—The patrol has just returned. Not a nigger to be seen, except dead ones.

In the House of Assembly on the 10th June the Colonial Secretary said:—From information I have received since last Friday, no doubt whatever exists as to the death of the Gaika chief Sandilli (hear hear). A man named Gabie, a rebel, first gave information that Sandilli had been shot and was dead. An escort was then provided, and the man was requested to conduct it to the place to find the body. They went to the neighbourhood of the Perie Bush, and after some time the body was discovered at the foot of a krantz, where it had evidently been conveyed. Mr. Wright, who was for some time magistrate with Sandilli, also went to view the body, and a post mortem examination took place. Mr. Wright recognized the body as that of the chief Sandilli, and after being shot he appears to have lingered for two or three days before death ensued. I have given directions, owing to the valuable information given by this man Gwadu, that he should be released from custody. With regard to Edmund Sandilli, the report which appeared in some of the papers that he had been captured, does not seem to be correct. He is still in the neighbourhood of the Thomas River, but has written a letter to the Government, as he is desirous of giving himself up, in fact I believe he is very sick. The probability is that in a short time he will be in the hands of Government.

Subsequently the Colonial Secretary read the following telegram received from King William's Town:—"Mapolis, Tini Macomo's brother, is in my gaol committed for trial by Fielding, in whose district he was apprehended on the 7th, and Stevenson has just sent in seven prisoners taken in a bush between Peelton and Kei Road. Amongst the prisoners is Somta, Sandilli's brother, and a man of considerable influence. He says Sandilli was for war, and said they could not give Kiva up or let him go without assistance. Disarmament under Fielding going on quietly."

Civil Commissioner, Victoria West.

Inspector Nesbitt reports from Fort Lanyon as follows:—Attacked on 5th stronghold of rebels with 113 men mounted; covered by seven-pounder. Enemy's positions strongly defended, but carried in rotation by our men. Fight lasted from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Rebels retreated precipitately, so much so, that several threw away guns and hurled themselves over precipices. Mangled bodies afterwards seen by our men. Estimated strength of enemy 800. Resistance of rebels most determined. Many shot at 20 yards, but steadiness of our men too much for enemy, who fled from position. Opinion of Inspector Nesbitt, and officers under him that stronghold of Malagas is completely broken up, and not likely to be occupied to any serious extent again. Casualties on our side:—killed, Corporal Woodward, F.A.M.P.; wounded, Private Caldecott, F.A.M.P., severely; Private Alteman, Victoria West Volunteers, slightly. Both doing well. Captured 2000 sheep and goats, 12 horses, 8 head of cattle, and 3 good waggons. Body of Walton, who was killed on 3rd May, recovered, and buried along with Corporal Woodward with military honours. Actual loss of rebels ascertained at 52 killed.

King William's Town, June 8.—Sandilli's body was found yesterday, and conveyed to Isidingi camp. Reported that Colonel Wood had captured Edmund Sandilli. June 10.—Vigorous patrol work has been performed during the last few days. On June 1, at junction of Kabousie and Kei Rivers, 14 enemy killed, one being Langongola, a councillor of Kreli's. Number of cattle captured. One Fingo wounded at Kabousie. On same day twenty-one sheep were recovered, and eight Kafirs killed without loss on our side. On the 8th patrol went to Nahoon River, killed four rebels; six surrendered. Finding of Sandilli's body officially confirmed. Gwadu, who led search party, has been released. Mapolis, brother of Tini Macomo, apprehended, examined, and now in gaol here, charged with sedition.

Graham's Town, June 8.—Forces are being concentrated towards lower part of Fish River. This afternoon 40 of the First City Volunteers Infantry leave, under Captain Nelson, for a fortnight's service. Rorke's coloured contingent, from Port Elizabeth, arrived. Few of the enemy reported seen, but a great deal of spoor.

From the Cape Argus of the 11th ultimo we learn that, after an unusually protracted debate in the House of Assembly, Mr. Merriman's vote of censure on his Excellency Sir Bartle Frere, in connexion with the dismissal of the Molteno Ministry, has been negatived by a majority of 37 to 22. Sandilli, the Gaika chief, was shot, and after lying for three days, he died in the Perie bush. His body was discovered at the foot of a krantz, and was identified. Edmund Sandilli is reported to be sick, and anxious to surrender to the Government. Sonta, Sandilli's brother, and a man of considerable influence has been made prisoner. A stronghold of the enemy was attacked on the 5th June, and after a fight which lasted several hours, was captured. The rebels, who numbered 800, at last retreated precipitately, several even hurling themselves over precipices to escape. The Cape Argus, commenting on the war news, writes:—"Consequent upon the death of Sandilli, the war may be at once expected to assume a new phase. Driven from their land, despoiled of all their flocks and herds, and left without an acknowledged authority, the Gaikas will not fail to perceive the futility of a prolonged resistance. It would, indeed, be contrary to the traditions of the Amaxosa race were they to delay the admission that, at all points, they have been broken and vanquished. With the restoration of peace and order, based upon durable foundations, the object upon our side will be attained, and when the rebels cry mercy, there exists no valid reason to disregard their prayer. It is to be supposed that a few desperadoes will prefer hunting down to the humiliation of surrender, but the great bulk of the rebels would doubtless take speedy advantage of any amnesty that might now be proclaimed. To this amnesty there would of necessity be some exceptions, and it may be admitted that a peace with the common people would not be calculated to facilitate the capture of the chiefs still at large. Most of the notorious leaders in the revolt have, in one way or another, already found cause to repent their temerity. Kiva, Umvundla, Bobazader, Dukwana, and Sandilli killed; Umfanta and Gongobella surrendered at discretion; Stock-Tyali, Tini Macomo, Ngubo, and Nathaniel Umhala captured. There now remain of consequence none but the Galeka chief Kreli and his son Sigcau, the Gaikas Edmund and Matanzima, the Talambies Dimba and Mackinnon with Seyolo (if he be not dead, as reported), Delima, Namba, Jali, and a few others, paid headmen and the like, whose exceptional offences might make it desirable to exclude them from present-clemency."

THE BESANT CASE.

The Master of the Rolls had again before him, on the 18th May, the case intituled "Re Besant, an infant," in which Mabel Emily Besant (through "her next friend," that is to say, her father), now in the eighth year of her age, the daughter of the Rev. F. Besant, vicar of Sibsey, near Boston, had presented a petition praying for her removal from the custody of her mother, Mrs. Annie Besant, with whom she was living under the terms of a separation deed executed by Mr. and Mrs. Besant. The grounds of the application were that Mrs. Besant entertains atheistic opinions and peculiar views on the population question. Mr. Ince, Q.C., and Mr. Bardswell, the counsel for the petitioner, stated that Mr. and Mrs. Besant were married in 1867. They had two children. The daughter Mabel Emily was born in 1870. In 1873 Mr. and Mrs. Besant separated, the custody and control of the girl being given to the mother for eleven months of every year, and to the father for the odd month. Mr. Besant said that immediately after the separation Mrs. Besant began to write and circulate atheistic books, and that she is still under the influence of Mr. Bradlaugh, and under that influence published those books, and also an indecent and immoral book known as "The Fruits of Philosophy." The learned counsel therefore contended that it was clearly for the benefit of the child that she should be removed from the custody of a person whose reputation was so tainted. Mrs. Besant, who conducted her case in person, admitted all the facts. A great part of her defence consisted of little arguments between herself and the Master of the Rolls, by which he said the time of the Court was wasted. She said that Mr. Besant had given up his parental rights by deed. The Master of the Rolls showed her that although the father had since 1873, to a certain extent, abandoned the custody of the child, yet that was not an absolute abandonment, and the child would be restored to his custody if the Court thought it would be for the benefit of the child that his original parental right should be revived. Mrs. Besant attempted to show that the Court never interfered with mere speculative expressions of opinion. Her opinions as to religion and the population question were speculative. She had taken the greatest care of the child, and had sent her to a boarding-school. She admitted, however, that she instructed the mistress of the boarding-school not to give the child any religious instruction. She had herself refused to teach her any prayers, but she might say any prayers she liked. As to religion, she desired the child's mind to remain perfectly free and unbiassed till it was strong enough to choose for itself. She never actively taught the child atheism, but simply wished her to remain in ignorance on the question of religion till she was competent to form an opinion. She had herself taken the child to churches, in order to show her there were many religious beliefs. With regard to the work called "The Fruits of Philosophy," the physiological details in it were no worse than the teaching allowed by the authority of Government in schools. She entertained conscientious opinions on the question of the limitation of the population, and she believed that by such views as she taught public morality would be increased and purified, because marriage would be made easier. The Master of the Rolls, after recapitulating the facts, held that Mrs. Besant, as to the religious and population questions, had so ruined her reputation that it would be impossible for her to associate with any respectable woman in this country. He had therefore only to consider what was for the benefit of the child; and he had come clearly to the conclusion that it would not be for the benefit of the child that she should remain with a person who had lost her reputation. To give no religious instruction to the child would tend to ruin her. His lordship concluded by ordering that the child should be given up to the father.

RECEPTION OF THE AUSTRALIAN CRICKETERS AT LIVERPOOL.

On Monday last, May 13, the steamship City of Berlin, having among her 440 passengers the Australian cricketers, reached Queenstown, and that night they were safely landed at Liverpool. By mid-day Tuesday they got to Nottingham, and were received with open arms. The ovation which greeted them must have been very encouraging, and their progress in a four-horse drag drawn by greys from the Midland station to the Maypole Hotel partook of the character of a triumphal procession. Arrived at their inn, they were received by several members of the County Cricket Club, and there was the usual and inevitable speech-making, without which no extraordinary—or, for the matter of that, ordinary—occurrence can be considered complete. One of the members of the committee, Mr. A. Hoyles, speaking for himself, the club, the town, and the country generally, heartily welcomed them; and the captain, Gregory, returned thanks. The arrangement at first intended to be made by the Notts Cricket Club was to have given the colonists a share of the gate-money. This was afterwards altered, and the visitors are to receive a lump sum of £200 for their first match in England. Great preparations have been made to accommodate the large company expected on the first three days of next week. The Great Northern and Midland Railway Companies will run special trains to Nottingham, and a portion of the Trent Bridge cricket ground will be set apart at reserved prices. On the third day the Australians will be entertained by the committee of the Nottingham Club at a dinner, to be held at the George Hotel, and there is every prospect of there being an enormous attendance during the contest. The ground is reported to be in capital condition, though unless we have a change from the showery weather of the last few days, and get plenty of sun and drying wind, the wickets are sure to be very dead, and favour the bowling of the Notts professionals. Good as the Australians undoubtedly are, to beat the eleven which Notts will put in the field will be asking them to do a big thing. Whatever the result of the match may be, English cricketers will, if their opponents win, be only too glad to congratulate them on their success; and after their long voyage, if they should come off second best, no one will be disposed to deny them reasonable excuse. We are glad to hear, looking at it from a point duly regarding our character for hospitality, that the Surrey club intends to follow the lead of Nottingham, and will invite the Australian eleven to dine with them on June 4, the second day of Surrey v. Australia at the Oval. But should our visitors be equally well treated wherever they play, they will require plenty of hard work to keep them in condition.

[Our readers have already been made aware of the fact that, at Nottingham, the local team beat the Australians with 14 runs to spare.—ED. S. M. H.]

BURNING OF THE SARDINIAN AND LOSS OF LIFE.

About 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon the Allan Line steamer Sardinian arrived in Lough Foyle to receive mails and passengers before proceeding on her Transatlantic voyage. Shortly after coming to anchor an explosion occurred in one of the coal bunkers, and the vessel immediately caught fire. The passengers in the forecastle were cut off from their comrades, and for some time the greatest confusion and consternation prevailed. With some difficulty the captain was able to communicate with the shore, and the telegraph wires were at once brought into requisition for the purpose of obtaining the assistance of tug steamers from Derry, and making arrangements in that city to accommodate about 400 of the 460 passengers on board. When the officers of the vessel succeeded in restoring comparative order, a hasty examination of the various compartments was made, and it was found that about 40 of the passengers had sustained severe injuries. Several had their legs broken, others their forearms injured, a few were burnt about the head and face, and three were found dead. It is not yet known how many were killed. It is generally believed that when a scrutiny of the passenger list is made the number already stated will be considerably increased. Shortly after 9 o'clock three steam tenders brought to Derry about 400 of the passengers. The wounded were temporarily placed in stores running parallel with the quay wharf. They were promptly attended by Sir W. Miller and other medical gentlemen. The passengers were chiefly Germans and Italians, but there was also a number of English and Scottish immigrants on board. The Sardinian was a comparatively new vessel, and was one of the best of the large fleet owned by the Messrs. Allan, Brothers, of Glasgow.

TERRIBLE EXPLOSION IN PARIS.

A terrible explosion occurred in Paris on Tuesday night at a toy factory in the Rue Béranger. The fire was not put out till Wednesday morning. Up to Wednesday night five bodies had been recovered, and it is supposed that fifteen persons still remain under the ruins. Marshal MacMahon has visited the place, and ordered every assistance to be given to the sufferers, for whom a public subscription has been set on foot. It is curious to reflect that so fearful a disaster should have originated in a toy shop, where enough ammunition for drawing-room pistols for a week's consumption was kept. It was supposed that this ammunition was not dangerous, because neither fire nor the wheel of a cart rolling over it would explode it. And yet the whole stock in the shop in the Rue Béranger exploded, and with such force that it brought to the ground a house inhabited by over 100 persons. The terror which the explosion caused in the immediate neighbourhood was immense, and the audience in the Troisieme Theatre Français, waiting for the curtain to rise, rushed from the house in alarm at the noise of the disaster. A great number of wounded persons and of mutilated remains have been rescued from the ruins; but, unfortunately, the clearing away of the debris has been greatly retarded by the shattered condition of the neighbouring houses, which threaten at each instant to fall in. It is considered impossible to prevent one immense wall from tumbling, and it is horrible to think that when it falls there will exist no chance of saving any more of those unfortunates under the ruins who may still be alive. It is probable, however, that all the persons not already rescued must have been either crushed, burned to death, or drowned by the water from the fire-engines.

THE CHANTRELLE POISONING CASE.

Lord Kinnaird, better known as the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, member for Perth, must have read the proceedings in the Chantrelle case—the recent case in Edinburgh, in which a French master has been condemned to death for poisoning his wife—with an interest not altogether devoid of pleasure. He is president of the Society for Insurance against Accidents, and the first effect of the trial must have been to convince him that as against swindlers intent on causing death by accident, and so plundering his society, his shareholders are nearly safe. The effect of the triple effort to cause death, and to avoid the presumption of suicide, and to raise the presumption of unavoidable accident, is to paralyze the murderer's ingenuity, and make him comparatively stupid. M. Eugène Marie Chantrelle was, late in 1877, a teacher of French in Edinburgh, who had practised his profession with some acceptance for ten years; was married to a very excellent and patient wife, and was father of two or three children. A man of some ability, with considerable knowledge of chemistry, and a plausible address, Chantrelle was also a very dissolute man, frequently suspected of intrigues, always wanting money, and hating his wife as an obstacle to his amours. He had repeatedly struck her, had once been punished in a police court for his brutality, and had frequently threatened to poison her in such a way that his wife believed him, and told her mother, who was incredulous, that she believed her life to be in serious danger. It was not in danger, however, in the ordinary way. Chantrelle had evidently a keen feeling of dislike for his wife, and a keen feeling of regard for his own personal safety and comfort, and it was not until he had hit upon a scheme for killing her and protecting himself, and at the same time acquiring a large sum of money, that he permitted himself to make the attempt. He asked his wife to allow him to insure her life against accident for £1000. So deep was his wife's distrust of him, so strong her conviction that he intended to be rid of her, that if he had proposed an ordinary insurance she would probably have refused, and he therefore limited his request to insurance against accident. Even to this she was most unwilling to accede, arguing that she never travelled, and was not likely therefore to die by any accident, and telling her mother that if the insurance was effected she should soon be dead; but she gave away, and the insurance was settled, after a most suspicious interview between Chantrelle and the insurance agent, which did much to convince the jury of the prisoner's guilt. Chantrelle wanted to make money as well as be rid of his wife, and he did not quite know what would or would not be taken to be accident. Would, he inquired, an unaccountable and unexplained death after eating a Welsh rarebit be taken to be accident? The idea in his mind evidently was to poison his wife, probably with the concentrated opium which he at last employed, in the strong-tasting cooked cheese; but the agent told him that such a death would not be an accident within the terms of the policy, and the money would certainly not be paid. Chantrelle, therefore, had to seek for some other device which would secure the triple end, and is apparently believed by the prosecution to have thought of the one alleged to have been tried by De Tourville against his mother-in-law, accidental shooting with a pistol. A pistol, at all events, did go off in his pocket, wounding one of his children, but the wife remained unhurt. He gave this idea up, however, if he ever entertained it, as too uncertain, and recurred to his former one, poison, but with this addition, that the poison must be so used as to create an impression of accidental death. A presumption of suicide would not help him, for death by suicide is not death by accident, and it was necessary to discover means of killing his wife without raising the idea of murder, and without engendering suspicion of suicide, but with such a presumption or proof of accident as to enable him to recover the insurance money.

The triple task proved too much for the murderer's ingenuity. On the night of January 1, 1878, he indeed contrived to administer a poisonous dose of opium to his wife, as it is supposed, in an orange, and she died; but that was not enough to enable him to make his claim upon the insurance office. He therefore, when the maid informed him that his wife was lying dying or dead, passed into the room, spoke to his wife, sent the girl out to attend to one of the children, who, he said, was crying, but who was not crying, and broke a gaspipe under the window by main strength. The girl, who had not perceived a smell of gas before, perceived it on her return, and he sent her for a doctor, alleging that his wife had died of gas-poisoning, an excessively rare mode of death, but one which is known to toxicologists, and which is accompanied by many of the symptoms that follow narcotic poisoning. The doctors, however, after some hesitation, for they had no reason to suspect foul play, and there was the gas in the room, decided that the cause of death must have been opium, and Chantrelle was arrested. Some stains on the bed caused by vomiting were analysed and found to contain opium, there was opium in the froth on the poor lady's mouth, and the absence of opium in the stomach was shown by experts to be usual, the drug being absorbed with extreme rapidity. It was further shown that the gas-pipe could only have been broken purposely, as it must have been heaved up and down. It appeared from the evidence, as recounted by the Judge, that no one except Chantrelle himself, and, by conceivable possibility, Mary Byrne, the servant, who had no interest in her mistress's death, and who gave her evidence very clearly, had access to the pipe. Finally, it was shown that the accused had studied poisons, that he kept a collection of poisons under his own lock and key, and that the preparation of opium was among them, and inaccessible to Madame Chantrelle. The jury, therefore, had no hesitation in returning a verdict of "Guilty," and the Judge sentenced the accused to death. The prisoner thereupon asked permission to say a few words, and made the following singular but extremely ingenious defence:—"I will say, speaking not from the chemical point of view, but speaking from a common-sense point of view,—I cannot expect that the gentlemen on the jury, and I am very thankful for the kind way in which they have attended to this case, but this is a peculiar one, involving a great deal of scientific matter, and I do not expect them to be chemists, nor the gentlemen here present [describing with his hand the circle of the bar] to be chemists. I am willing to admit the dark stains on the nightgown, and when I say that I am here speaking not so much in my own interests—a man has only one life, and I have made the sacrifice of mine—but in the interests of public morality and public safety, I am quite willing to admit that the stains on the sheet and nightgown contain sufficient evidence that opium was there. I go further, and say opium was there. I am satisfied that opium was there, and I am satisfied further, gentlemen, that I did not put it there; that it did not proceed from Madame Chantrelle's stomach, but was rubbed in by some person whom I do not know. My reason for saying this—although my word goes for nothing, and I do not wish it to go for anything—my reason for saying this is, opium was administered or taken in the solid form. That is perfectly evident. There was opium there; it could be seen by the naked eye. We take the reaction of meconic acid or the reaction of morphia from a chemist's point of view. These reactions are never satisfactory, but from a common-sense point of view they are." That is, Chantrelle admitted the whole of the argument, which he could not disprove, and addressed himself to the single point which, as he tried to say, jurymen could not understand, but chemists could, that opium recovered from the vomit would differ from opium used solid and rubbed upon the nightclothes. That is very ingenious, more especially as it tallies with the single favourable remark made by the Judge, that Chantrelle had made no effort to remove the stains; but the defence is hopelessly inconsistent with the fact that opium was found at the corner of Madame Chantrelle's mouth, and we mention it because it shows the ingenuity of a view which, nevertheless, failed to give the murder any plausible colour of accident.

The truth is—and it is a truth that will not displease decent readers—that murder under colour of accident is excessively difficult, unless the murderer will risk his own life as well as his victim's. Poison is impossible, unless it is intended to start a theory of suicide, and every other device either requires, as in De Tourville's case, the presence of the murderer or the use of a pistol, which excites suspicion; or as in the murder which precedes the catastrophe in Marryat's "King's Own" a resolution to succeed even if his own life goes too. Mr. Rainsford, in that novel, kills his wife, and is believed to be the victim of an accident; but he does it by overturning her and himself too, while so driving as to make his horses run away. Murder is, however, always possible when the murderer is careless of life, but the usual murderer wishes to escape. When, in addition to this, he wishes not only to escape, but to make a profit out of a scene, death by accident, which he has to devise and arrange, he loads himself with conditions which, as we see in the cases both of de Tourville and Chantrelle, render impunity excessively improbable, not to say out of any reasonable calculation. No amount of callousness helps the murderer to the necessary amount of ingenuity.

POST-MORTEM INQUIRIES IN CHINA.

FENG SHEN, Military Governor of Hen Lung-Kiang, in a late number of the Pekin Gazette, memorialises with reference to an appeal lodged by one Wang King-tien, accusing certain persons of having caused the death of his brother, Wang King-shun, who hanged himself some years ago in consequence of an altercation he had with some neighbours, agriculturists, and died by his own hand. The body was inspected by a corpse examiner, and no marks of violence other than the self-inflicted one having been discovered, the usual guarantee was given, and it was handed over to the relatives of the deceased for interment. Wang King-tien, the brother, then went to Peking and lodged an appeal, which was referred in the usual manner to memorialist. A second examination of the corpse was made with the same result, and the appellant, who had been sent with the corpse examiner to be present at the inquest, having made his escape while being escorted back to prison, once more found his way to Peking, and again appealed. Memorialist was referred to a second time, and seeing how persistently Wang King-tien asserted that the body showed other marks of violence than those reported, began to think that an injustice might possibly have been done through the incompetence of the local corpse examiner. He accordingly applied for the services of a secretary and an experienced examiner from Moukden. Sanction was granted by decree, dated 17th March, 1877, and in due course the secretary and examiner arrived. After inspecting the records of the case, and putting a few general questions to the plaintiff and defendant, they proceeded, with the parties to the suit and their witnesses, to the place where the body was deposited, to make an inspection of it. They found the coffin moved from its original position, and the seals that had been placed upon it injured. At this juncture the examiners who had originally inspected the corpse informed the secretary that on that occasion the appellant and his father had consented to the test by "steaming" on the sole condition that the flesh had entirely decayed, stipulating that if any flesh remained the pai-kiang process (test by the application of lime, the lees of wine, salt, and vinegar) should be resorted to. To this stipulation they adhered on the present occasion, obstinately refusing to listen to persuasion from the secretary, showing by the absurdity of their demand that there was trickery somewhere. Before proceeding further with the inquest, the secretary applied to the memorialist for instructions, and he referred him to the "Coroners' Manual," which clearly lays down the course to be pursued, adding that Wang King-tien could exercise no choice in the matter. The coffin was then opened in the presence of the parties and a number of witnesses. The body was swathed in blue cotton cloth, and the examiners who had inspected it before declared that it was then wrapped in white cotton cloth, a most significant fact in the opinion of the secretary. They found that the skin had turned black, and dried on to the bones, spots of mildew appearing in different places, and the bones showing through were the body had been eaten by worms. The skin was hard, and would not yield to the touch, and the examiners declared that it would be impossible to verify the statements of the appellant by the pai-kiang process, so that they must have recourse to "steaming," which necessitated disintegration of the body. Before this can be done, a deed of authorisation must be signed by a near relative of the deceased, whose duty it also is himself to raise the head of the corpse. Wang King-tien persistently declined to sign this authorisation, so the examination came to a standstill. The secretary suggested that an Imperial warrant should be applied for compelling the man to authorise the test. The memorialist thought he would first try his powers of persuasion, and had Wang King-tien brought before him; but the man was obstinate, and persisted in his refusal. In view of the fact that two appeals have been made to Pekin, three inquests held, and Wang King-tien's charges, extending over a period of six years, still remain unrefuted or unsubstantiated, the memorialist thinks the matter ought now to be thoroughly cleared up, and he therefore prays that the Board of Punishments may be instructed to indicate to him the course he should pursue under the present circumstances.

DETERMINED SUICIDE AT BATHURST.—The Bathurst Times of Saturday reports:—"A most determined suicide was committed yesterday morning by a man named Feeney. It seems that deceased, who is a man well on in years, and has resided in the district for a considerable period, had come in from the Lagoon, where he was living, and proceeded to Mr. Medaris's Sportsman's Arms, Piper-street, on Thursday. He was at the hotel during the evening, and appeared tolerably lively in spirits when he retired to bed for the night, having spent some hours in company of the landlord and several persons in the house. The rest of the bedrooms being occupied, he was accommodated with a bed in an apartment where two sons of Mr. Medaris slept. In the morning, about 7 o'clock, one of the boys saw him standing at the door, and when he turned round he observed that the man laboured in his breathing, but not sufficiently as to cause alarm. Feeney got into bed and buried himself in the bed-clothes, and in an hour afterwards he was seized with convulsions. Upon being asked what was the matter, he said that he had poisoned himself with some insect powder which he had purchased at Mr. Butterworth's (chemist's) for the purpose of destroying mice. He also said that "they needn't bother over him," for he had "had quite enough of this world." It was subsequently found that he had swallowed a packet of vermin-killer in a glass of ale. Upon ascertaining what had taken place, Mr. Medaris sent for medical aid, but as none of the doctors happened to be accessible at the time, the sufferer (who had meanwhile undergone great agony) was removed to the hospital before any of them arrived. Feeney had become very weak before the hospital was reached, and just as he was being carried through the passage between the wards he expired. We understand that the deceased was a widower, and leaves a family of grown-up children. An inquest was held on the body yesterday afternoon, when a verdict was returned that death had resulted from the effects of poison administered by his own hand.

SIR HENRY PARKES AT WAGGA WAGGA.

(From the Wagga Express.)

ON Thursday evening last a banquet was given to Sir Henry Parkes, at the Criterion Hotel, in recognition of that gentleman's great political services. Between forty and fifty gentlemen, representatives of all the interests of the district, were present. The room in which the banquet was held, the billiard-room, was tastefully decorated for the occasion. The whole arrangements were capital, reflecting the highest credit on Messrs. Gorman and Moxham. No affair of the kind yet held in Wagga has given such general satisfaction. The chair was occupied by the Mayor, Mr. George Mair, on whose right sat the guest, and on whose left was the Police Magistrate. The vice-chairs were respectively occupied by Dr. Wren, and Mr. James Cochran, of Widgiewa.

After the usual loyal toasts had been disposed of with the customary honours, Dr. Wren briefly proposed the toast of the evening, "The Health of Sir Henry Parkes." He referred to the long and eminent services which he had rendered to the colony ever since the era of responsible Government. They had not met there with the intention of making any political demonstration, but simply to accord honour to Sir Henry Parkes, whom he hoped would long continue in the political arena. (Cheers.)

Sir HENRY PARKES, who was received with continued cheers responded. He could not fairly say that he was unaccustomed to festive occasions like the present. He really failed to recollect the number of times that he had been entertained by his fellow colonists. He could say, however, without flattering them that he had never experienced more gratification at the great warmth which characterised their reception of him. (Cheers.) Whatever services he had rendered—and he had left some marks behind him—there was nothing to lead him to expect such an entertainment as the present. He merely expected to see half a dozen gentlemen who had approved of his public life. (Cheers.) And while the proceedings came as a kind of surprise to him, it was the especially representative class of men whom he saw there that was so gratifying to him. The gentleman who had proposed his health had struck a key-note when he said that the present entertainment did not mean that they were seeking for any favour from the Government. (Cheers.) It was no flattery to them to say that in Wagga there was an absence of local feeling; self-interests always seemed less thought of than the public good. This was a sturdy and truly British national feeling. The more they endeavoured to lose sight of their own interests and place the whole interests of the country at heart, the greater certainty there was of forming a grand independent nation. It was with pleasure that he reverted to the fact that there was no party-feeling in his reception. At the late election it was impossible for any public man not to feel grateful for the manner in which they had recorded their votes for him. He had been connected with the greatest constituency in the country; he had been intimately connected with that constituency for a quarter of a century, and had generally been returned by a large majority over his competitors. Notwithstanding this, he was defeated at the late election, and he ascribed it to the fact that the electors evinced great anxiety to return two other men, thinking that he would not require their votes. It was thought that, as he had been returned time after time, he could spare the votes, so they plumped for their favourite candidates. He knew that nearly all those votes would have been recorded for him had it been thought that he would require them. Had the election taken place the day following, the result would have been very different. Yet, after long years of patient services, this then was the result; he determined upon not offering himself for election anywhere. It was impossible, therefore, for him to say a single word to those who supported him in this electorate. (Cheers.) He would have been very dissatisfied to have said a word which would have prejudiced Mr. Leary's return. (Cheers.) Then, again, Canterbury electorate returned him. Those, therefore, who exerted themselves on his behalf in the Murrumbidgee electorate, had before them the fact that he had been elected by another constituency, and they could not therefore say whether he would sit or not. Yet, notwithstanding this, the people of Wagga Wagga recorded two votes to one in his favour. He had met with a full share of honours in his time, yet he should count no honour so high as that of representing them. (Cheers.) The position he had taken up precluded any other result at the late election. They were not a cringing people—a Government-seeking people, and if they were anxious for the future welfare of the country, he sincerely hoped they would persevere in the course which they had adopted. There was far too strong a disposition ever to bow before the Governments; to seek small favours; like the faithful hound to pick up the crumbs which fell from the Ministerial table. But this was not the way in which a proud nation was built up such as England, or to allow Australia to follow in its footsteps. It was not the true independence of the free citizen. (Cheers.) He could find no language sufficient to express his feelings at the very warm manner at which they had been pleased to respond to the toast of his health. Might he not be pardoned if he said that to some extent this was a recognition of services rendered during the last thirty years. (Cheers.) For it is thirty years since he first took an active part in politics. The first time he took part in politics was in conjunction with a gentleman, who has since filled the post of Chancellor of the Exchequer in the mother country. Then again he took a prominent part in the movement resisting the transportation of criminals to this country from England. From that time to the present there had been no large question agitated, no matter which had a large influence on the welfare of the colony in which he had not taken part. (Cheers.) It had been his privilege to be associated in politics with the ablest men in the colony, and he might add that he had secured the respect of the men with whom he had been associated. (Cheers.) With some of the most important movements which have taken place he had his full share. His name was broadly marked in the history of public institutions in the colony. (Cheers.) Nor would they deny that his name was broadly marked in the progress of municipal government. The free libraries which have sprung up throughout the colonies were his conception, and were carried out at his instance. (Cheers.) He might revert to other measures, if time permitted. Thirty years of public life mean a great deal, and there is much he could not find time to explain. It meant a vast amount of labour in the ineffectual contention for what one believes to be right. (Cheers.) In his own experiences in many avocations he found very many very good men afflicted with one idea. Now, he held that no man could succeed in dealing with the public affairs of this colony unless he forecasts the consequences of a step. He must have sufficient comprehensiveness and width of view to see how one law will affect other laws. Even in the church—and he trusted Archdeacon Pownall would pardon him—they had the man with one idea. All English churchmen did not take a gloomy view of life—for instance, there was the fox-hunting parson, and others again fond of life. He remembered a tale told of a clergyman, who was very fond of horse-racing, and one Sunday when performing service, he read the Collect as that for "the last Sunday before the Derby" (laughter.) It was impossible that he could have been thinking much about his Sunday school or indigent poor then. What he wished to convey was that a man with broad views could deal with conflicting interests satisfactorily, but the man of one idea could not. He had heard it propounded that ability was not required for public life, and that men destitute of ability were fitted to manage the affairs of the country. He had tried to make himself acquainted with ancient history, but he had failed in discovering an age of "noodledom." Mr. Canning was an authority, and said on one occasion, when it was desirable to bring William Pitt into a Government, that the adage of "measures, not men," was great clap-trap. One might as well say that the carriage was everything and the horses nothing. So far from there being any truth in it, he believed that measures meant nothing—men everything. And this led him to another reflection, and that was with reference to the old proverb about the monkey climbing up a pole—the higher he climbs the more he shows his tail. There were some monkeys with most beautiful tails, but the higher they got, their tails were more likely to be confounded with the tails of ordinary monkeys. (Laughter and cheers.) Then again they recollected the story of the fly on the coach-wheel. It was thought that it propelled the coach, the horses might go on, but it was the motive power. Now, it seems, that six or seven flies got on the wheel of the State coach, they unharness the horses, and leave the vehicle in the bush. What a predicament, truly, is the State coach in! If we had acquisitions such as those owned by Gladstone and his great rival Disraeli, it would be different. But as it is, the greatest abilities possible ought to be brought into service, which long after we have passed away shall be esteemed as truth itself. (Cheers.) Could we not find an illustration in the land question? Have we acted wisely in this, or is not the result that conflicting interests exist? Can it be right when men are so much given to evade the law? After twenty years of trial they were about to reap a bitter harvest, and he feared that the virus now introduced would spread. Was it not by many thought pardonable to defeat the law? And so, too, it might be said of all large questions. The person who says that no ability is required to govern, lies under the greatest delusion. He himself was not one who believed that responsible government was a mistake. If we have committed errors, it might have been expected we should have done so. We have had no such training as that procurable in the mother country. We came, some of us from shops—some of us from farms—entirely unfitted for the tasks before us. It is rather surprising that we have done so well as we have. If capacity is wanting in a member of Parliament, the blame is upon the constituents who return him. (Cheers.) Theirs is the fault, and they must bear the penalty. It is so necessary that the electors should endeavour to return the members best fitted to their requirements. He would count good neighbourliness as nothing compared with confidence. To ensure that confidence, electors should choose the best and ablest man they can procure. (Cheers.) They had much to hope for in the future. There was a race of sons of the soil growing up, and the next generation would be one of educated men, gifted with the best qualifications for representatives. Australia was inhabited by Englishmen, and would rival any country. He did not despair that it yet would be justly proud of its Parliament. (Cheers.) He thanked them again for the kind manner in which they had drunk his health. He might assert, referring to a remark which fell from Dr. Wren, that he had no intention of leaving Parliament so long as he could find any constituency to send him there. (Cheers.) He would not retire for fifty years. (Laughter and cheers.) At least not until he felt past the prime of life. (Renewed laughter.) He believed that the time was about to come when the best services could be rendered by him, untrammelled by office—in a position where he could exercise an unstrained judgment. With the support of his fellow colonists he had attained the highest position. His sole object was to maintain the constitution. He was prepared to do his utmost without any desire for further promotion in the service of the State. Any man in the public service should be prepared to act in an emergency, and the highest service he maintained was to be rendered by men outside the Government. When he was member for Sydney he then refused to consider himself a mere delegate. He considered it just as much happiness, just as much honour, to serve them as those who sent him to Parliament. The man who does right in political life, is he who serves the interests of the whole community. (Cheers.) Sydney could not prosper without them; they could not get on without Sydney. That man is an enemy to the country who tries to serve the particular district which returns him. (Cheers.) We shall best advance the interests of the country by dealing with the general good. (Loud and continued cheers.)

Mr. Fitzhardinge then briefly proposed "The Legislature of New South Wales."

Sir Henry Parkes, who was again loudly cheered, said it appeared to be a matter of necessity for him to respond, as there was no other member, it appeared, present. He could say that, compared with other young Parliaments—it has only existed since 1856—it contrasted most favourably, and was a body which had passed many meritorious measures. He rose to propose the "Pastoral, Agricultural, and Commercial Interests of Wagga Wagga." They were certainly very rich in pastoral wealth, and, as far as he could judge, agriculture was carried on extensively. Any one who looked through the town could at once see that their commerce was by no means inconsiderable. But he had heard some complaints of depression of trade, which perhaps could hardly be wondered at when they depended so largely on one producing interest. They might calculate that a period of depression would set in sooner or later. The depression, however, he felt convinced, would only be of a very transient character. Their resources were so vital that this would soon pass away. However, they did not fret much, and he did not think they had much to complain of. He wished them the most prosperous circumstances, and hoped that others who were unfortunate would bear the infliction with as pleasant faces as they. (Cheers.) It was twelve years ago since he visited the town, and he could see that their efforts had been most abundantly blessed. If depression brought about such results as those he had witnessed he did not know whom to pity.

Mr. Hammond responded for the Pastoral Interests, Mr. Hale for the Agricultural, and Mr. L. S. Joseph for the Commercial.

"The Ladies," proposed by Mr. Hawkins, and responded to by Mr. A. Campbell; the "Press," proposed by Mr. Hammond, and the health of Messrs. Baylis and Hammond, proposed by Mr. Hale, concluded the list of toasts.

LAW.

MONDAY.

Sixty-seven persons, apprehended on Saturday and Sunday, were fined for drunkenness; sixty-seven were locked up before 2 a.m. of Sunday.

For using obscene language, Kate Garrity, Sophia Williams, and Mary Howarth were severally sentenced to pay 40s., or to be imprisoned one month.

James Woodward, charged with having wilfully and maliciously broken a pane of glass, valued at 40s., the property of the Bank of Australasia, pleaded guilty. He wanted a policeman to take him into custody for protection, but he was too well known to be so treated. Forthwith, it appears, he threw a brick through the window in question. To pay 40s. damages, or to be imprisoned two months.

John Buchanan was summarily convicted of having stolen five antimacassars, of the value of 40s., the property of Samuel Lewis, of Dixon-street, hairdresser, and was sentenced to two months imprisonment.

George Vickery, omnibus driver, was fined 10s. for cruelty to a horse, by driving him with a sore on the shoulder.

Thomas Lynch was charged with stealing from the person. Sergeant Larkins about midnight of Saturday, the 29th June, charged the prisoner with having, on the 18th March last, stolen from the person of one Richard Lucas one meerschaum pipe, valued at 22s. 6d.; produced a pipe he received from a pawnbroker named Rogers. Richard Lucas, clerk in the employment of S. Burdekin, William-street, deposed that while standing in a crowd, at the corner of George-street and Market-street, between 8 and 9 p.m. of the 18th March, a meerschaum pipe was stolen from his coat pocket; the pipe produced is the same. George Thompson, dealer, deposed that about the 18th March last, the prisoner sold to him the pipe produced by Larkins for 3s. 6d. Prisoner in reply denied that he ever sold the pipe to Thompson. Committed for trial at the Quarter Sessions.

Before Messrs. Murray and Alexander.

On the summons paper were fourteen cases, of which one was dismissed, another was struck out for want of prosecution, and two were postponed. In Kettle v. Hughes, Cavanagh v. Wade, Crawley v. Staine, M'Donald v. Lovett, Coulter v. Moses, and Fowler v. Dwyer, proceedings by landlords against overholding tenants, a warrant of possession was ordered in each. Margaret O'Brien was fined 10s. for assaulting Johanna Foley; and David Rairey was fined 60s. for assaulting Elizabeth Riley. In Burgess v. Burgess, a wife's suit for maintenance, an order was made for payment of 12s. 6d. a week; and in Pattison v. Thomas, a proceeding to recover sundry articles of domestic use alleged to be illegally detained, an order was made for their delivery to complainant.

WATER POLICE COURT.

MONDAY.

BEFORE the Water Police Magistrate, and Mr. Elliott.

Twenty persons were fined 5s. each, for being found drunk in a public place, with the alternative of two days in gaol.

Richard Walsh was fined 20s., or seven days' in gaol, for using obscene language.

INQUEST.—Mr. Shiell, the City Coroner, held an inquest yesterday touching the death of Alice Frances Buckham, about three months old, who was found dead in bed on Saturday morning. The father, the landlord of the West End Hotel, gave evidence that the deceased slept in the same bed with himself, his wife, and two other children, and that on the day named, early in the morning, she was found dead. Previously she had been suffering from a cold, and it was shown that death had resulted from asphyxia, caused by whooping cough, and the jury returned a verdict accordingly.

FOUND DROWNED.—Yesterday morning the body of a man was found drowned in the water near Dawes' battery, and was taken to the morgue, where it was subsequently identified as that of John Everett, a seaman on board H.M.S. Wolverine, who was reported as missing on the 2nd instant, and was returned as a deserter. An inquest will be held to-day on the body.

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.—ITS UNEQUALLED EFFICACY IN CONSUMPTION AND WASTING DISEASES.—Dr. Hardwicke, Coroner for Central Middlesex, writes:—"I have great pleasure in adding my testimony to the already well-recognized virtues of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil, having prescribed it many years, and being satisfied that it is a pure oil, very palatable, and more easily digested than the pale oils. It possesses medicinal properties which also render it more efficacious than other kinds of fatty oils. In the class of tubercular diseases, including consumption, so prevalent in our great centres of population, the use of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is attended with manifold advantages; and I know of no therapeutic agent which, in connection with judicious sanitary measures, is better calculated to stay the ravages of these great consuming plagues of the British Islands. The iodine, bromine, and phosphorus in Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Oil are undoubtedly efficacious, and being naturally combined with the most easily assimilated fatty substances, make it act both as food and medicine for many invalids who take it periodically with great benefit to health." Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is sold only in capsuled imperial half-pints, pints, and quarts, by all chemists and druggists. Sole consignees, Ansar, Harford, and Co., 77, Strand, London. THE S.S. ACONCAGUA.

The largest of the fine line of steamers belonging to the now well-established Orient Line, running between England and the colonies, arrived last night from Plymouth, via Adelaide and Melbourne, and, like her predecessors belonging to the same company trading to the colonies, has kept up the prestige of this fine fleet. The Aconcagua is considerably the largest steamer, but in all essential particulars is the same as those that have already visited the colony and been so highly appreciated by the travelling public. She was built in 1872 by Messrs. John Elder and Co., of Glasgow, and her dimensions are as follows:—Length, 404 feet 8 inches; beam, 41 feet 4 inches; and depth of hold, 35 feet 3 inches. Her net register is 2630 tons, and the gross tonnage 4106 tons, and under the deck 4076. She is registered A within /11 at Lloyd's, indicating that her plating is heavier than the required specification of Lloyd's. Her engines are almost colossal in their proportions, but they are beautifully finished, and are in thorough and effective working order. They are on the compound principle, direct acting, and surface-condensing, with inverted cylinders. These are 61 inches and 112 inches respectively, with a 48-inch stroke, and during the voyage out a speed of close on 12½ knots was averaged. Cape Town was reached on the 11th ultimo, and the following day the steamer resumed her passage for Australia. We are indebted to Mr. Joseph Power, purser, for London files to the date of departure; as also the latest Cape and South Australian files obtainable.

Custom House.—Entered Outwards, July 8: City of Adelaide (s.), 824 tons, Captain Walker, for Melbourne; Alexandra (s.), 346 tons, Captain Saunders, for Levuka; Kerchalon, barque, 267 tons, Captain Lanco, for Yokohama, via Newcastle; Clyde, barque, 562 tons, Captain Stollery, for Newcastle; Mavis, schooner, 80 tons, Captain Lowry for Broadsound and Port Mackay; City of Sydney (s.), 3017 tons, Captain Dearborn, for San Francisco, via Auckland and Honolulu.

The Leichardt (s.), Captain G. J. Finlayson, left Cooktown at 12.15 p.m. on the 29th ultimo; anchored at Port Douglass at 8.30 p.m.; proceeded at 9.20 p.m.; arrived at Cairns Wharf at 2.40 a.m. on the 30th ultimo; left at 9 a.m.; arrived at Bowen at midnight; left at 1.10 a.m. on the 2nd instant; anchored at Flat Top at 1.15 p.m.; proceeded at 2.50 p.m.; arrived at Keppel Bay at 10.10 a.m. on the 3rd instant; left at 10.40 a.m.; crossed Wide Bay bar at 11.18 a.m on the 4th instant; arrived at Brisbane at 12.15 a.m. on the 5th instant; left Brisbane at 12.15 p.m. on the 6th; cleared the South Passage at 4.45 p.m., and arrived at Sydney at 4 p.m. on the 8th instant. She experienced strong S.E. wind and squally weather to Flat Top, thence to Brisbane light variable winds and fine weather, thence to Seal Rocks strong southerly wind and southerly swell, and to Sydney variable wind and fine weather.

MELBOURNE.

ARRIVALS.

July 8.—Killarney (s.), Macedon (s.), from Sydney; Madura, from Newcastle.

The M. A. Dixon, from Java for this port, which was reported about a month ago by telegram from West Australia as having put into King George's Sound through stress of weather, and with several of the crew disabled, arrived in the bay on Wednesday night. The passage of the barque has run into sixty-nine days over all, and besides being inordinately long, there has been a good deal of exciting incident crowded into it; but although there has been considerable damage of property, and some personal injury sustained, fortunately there was no loss of life. That the vessel should have come through such a stormy ordeal without greater loss is something astonishing, and Captain Corner and his crew are deserving of all credit for having brought her safe into port. The M. A. Dixon, with a cargo of about 570 tons of sugar for the Victoria Sugar Company, left Sourabaya on April 26, and met with light baffling weather to Bali Straits, which were cleared on May 6. The S.E. trades were picked up two days afterwards, and strong breezes were carried to latitude 22 S., which was reached on May 15; these were followed, however, by exceedingly light variable airs until May 25, the vessel's progress during that time averaging little more than 25 miles a day. This desultory work then terminated, and fresh breezes with squally weather set in. At noon on the foregoing date the wind came away from the westward with surprising suddenness, and shortly afterwards blew a tremendous gale from W.N.W. When the squall struck her the cargo shifted, and during the twelve hours, in which the wind raged with hurricane force, the barque was almost overborne by its strength, so much so that she lay with her yardarms in the sea, and the water was half-way up the houses on deck. During the height of the gale the seas broke over the vessel repeatedly, and washed away the topgallant bulwarks and everything movable on the lee side of the deck. Moderate weather prevailed afterwards for about sixteen hours, but on May 27, at 6 p.m., the wind freshened to a gale, which lasted until noon on the following day, when it abated. The wind then shifted round south-easterly to N. and N.W., and increased to a very heavy gale, accompanied with a fearful sea. The next tempestuous weather was fallen in with on the 3rd ultimo, in lat. 35·50 S., and lon. 115·30 E. The barque on that date, while running, was struck on the quarter by a stupendous sea, which smashed up the wheel, and by its resistless force sent the two men flying who were steering, and injured them severely. The second mate was also swept off the poop, and had his arm broken. The binnacle was carried away by the same sea, and the weight of water burst in the skylight, so that the cabin was flooded, and before it could be baled out, the water had all found its way into the hold. At 6 p.m. on the 4th ultimo the gale abated in violence, and Captain Corner bore up for King George's Sound to procure medical assistance for his men, and repair damages to the vessel. Albany was reached on the following day, and after remaining there until the 17th, the voyage was resumed. Easterly weather was met with until the 26th, light winds prevailing from N.E. to E.S.E.; but from lat. 42 S., and lon. 128 20 E., moderate winds were carried to Cape Otway, which was passed on Tuesday morning last.—Argus.

The Aconcagua (s.), from London, via Melbourne, arrived this evening, bringing about 1000 tons of original cargo for this port.

The Stock and Share market opened quite as firmly as it closed on Friday. Bank shares exhibited very little alteration. City offered at 10½; Commercial at 100, and Joint Stock at 14; Mercantile, fully paid, changed hands at £6 14s. to £6 14s. 6d., and are held for 6¾; New South Wales had buyers at 50¼; sellers at 59½; New Zealand wanted at 23½, offered at 23¾; Oriental had sellers at the reduced price of 39, and were inquired for at 35; National of Queensland had buyers at 6⅝, sellers at 6¾; Union, buyers at 60, sellers at 62. There was no change in the value of debentures. Insurance shares firm, City were taken at 1s. 7d. Australian Fire held for 7s., General for 62s, and New South Wales for 32s. Mercantile had buyers at 2s. 6d., sellers at 2s. 8d. Pacific wanted at 33s. 6d. Sydney Fire offered at 77s. 6d. In Steam we note a further decline. Australasian fell to 17½, sales. Clarence and Richmond had buyers at 7, sellers at 7½; North Shore wanted at 6s. 6d., holders asking 7s. 6d. Mining shares quiet. Bulli Coal held for 14, Wallsend for 18, and Waratah for 7½. Volunteer land orders had sellers at £112. Messrs. Richardson and Wrench will hold a large sale of bank, insurance, and other shares to-morrow (Tuesday).

In the absence of mail advices there was no disposition to transact business in the import markets.

The telegrams from England, published to-day, tended to increase the depression existing in the breadstuffs market. Stocks of Adelaide wheat are very light, and as the millers have a short supply prices are not expected to go much below 6s. for a time. Victorian dealers will, however, be ready to avail themselves of the opportunity to dispose of a share of their surplus if the South Australian trade do not meet the market promptly. Letters have been received from Melbourne, asking about what purported to be a telegram from Sydney, published there, stating that two houses in the flour trade were in difficulties. In every instance the reply has been a denial. In liquors we hear of small sales of bottled beer at full rates. 9s. 3d. was paid for Hennessy's brandy in quarters. Late telegrams from Mauritius are favourable to holders of sugar. The shipments for the month included 300 tons to Melbourne, 350 tons to Adelaide, and these were the last of the season. The new crop was expected to open at high prices.

Messrs. L. E. Threlkeld and Co. will sell by auction, to-morrow, the cargo of Oregon lumber, ex Garibaldi.

The New Zealand Loan and Mercantile Agency Co. has received the following telegram dated London the 6th instant:—"The wool sales closed firmly on 5th instant. They comprised about 290,000 bales. 160,000 bales were taken for export, and 44,000 bales held over for future disposal. Trade in the manufacturing districts is slightly better. Bank of England rate 3½ per cent."

During 1877, 23,536 tons of preserved meat were imported into the United Kingdom. Of this quantity 86,105 cases were shipped from Sydney, 68,249 from Victoria, 22,902 from Queensland, 22,400 from New Zealand, and 764 from South Australia.

The following table shows the declared value of imports and exports entered at the Sydney Customs from January 1 to June 29, in 1877 and 1878:—

London advices to May 18 are to hand, per Aconcagua. The Times of that date, reporting on the state of the money market, says:—

"Since the further improvement in the position of the Bank of England has become more generally known, the value of money has again slightly receded, and the terms for three months' bank bills are now nearer 2½ than 2¼. The competition of French houses for what bills there are continues to be very keen, and helps to make the value of money very unstable. A large sum of gold was taken from the Bank to-day for Scotland. On 'Change the Russian rate shows a rise of from 2 to 3 per cent., and the Austrian of nearly 1 per cent. There has been a further rise in the funds to-day, although the market was easier at the close. Consols rose from 96½ to ¾, the opening quotation, to 96⅞ to ⅛, but leave off at 96½ to ⅝ for money and 96⅝ for the account. Reduced and new three per cents. are higher at 94½, 95. Bank stock improved 1, and Board of Works ½. None of the Indian railway stocks are altered, but stock continues scarce, and prices very strong. In colonial bonds the tendency was towards higher prices."

MELBOURNE, Monday.

The railway deliveries in Melbourne for the week ending the 6th instant were:—Wheat, 4631 bags; flour, 4285 bags.

The flour market is extremely dull. There were sales at from £10 17s. 6d. to £11.

MELBOURNE LIVE STOCK MARKET.

J. C. Walker & Co.—Fat cattle: 1389 head were yarded and passed the hammer to-day; all qualities were represented with a very fair proportion of good and prime. The market was not quite so dull as we had for the past few weeks, but we cannot report prices any higher. Quotations: Best bullocks, £9 5s to £10 5s; extra prime and heavy, to £12; good, £8 to £9; medium, £5 to £6; best cows, to £7 5s; good, £5 10s to £6; others, £4 to £5. The following were about some of the principal averages:—Black's, Gippsland, bullocks, £10; Connisbee's ditto, £9 17s 8d. Fat calves: 70 yarded. Prices were about the same as last week. Best made, 50s to 60s; good, 40s to 45s; medium, 20s to 30s.

Fat Sheep.—15,446 penned for the week's supply, in which were a larger proportion of good crossbred sheep than of late, as well as a number of good merinos. The market was the dullest we have had for some weeks, and a reduction in prices from last Wednesday's rates had to be submitted to; the late large supplies of beef seriously affecting this market. Quotations—Prime crossbred wethers, 17s 6d to 19s 6d; good, 14s to 15s; prime merino ditto, 13s to 14s 6d; good, 10s to 11s 6d; best ditto ewes, 9s to 11s; good ditto ditto, 7s to 8s. We sold a draft of wethers for James Tyson, Esq., Lachlan River; and 600 ewes for Mr. Jacobs.

Fat Lambs.—950 penned. Prices did not equal the high rates made last week by the small supply then, but were about equal to the preceding week. Best made 11s to 12s; good, 9s to 10s; medium, 7s to 8s. We sold 113 at 9s.

Tin and Copper Ore.—The following is a return of tin ore received at Newcastle and Morpeth for the week ending June 29:—From Willow Tree to Newcastle, 11 tons 11 cwt; from Willow Tree to Morpeth, 11 tons 11 cwt. 3 qrs. 6 lbs., making a total of 23 tons 2 cwt. 3 qrs. 6 lbs. Of the copper ore and regulus received at Sydney station for week ending 29th June, the return is:—From Bowning, 60 bags regulus, 5 tons—and 815 ingots copper, 5 tons 17 cwt. 2 qrs.; from Eskbank, 1799 ingots copper, 12 tons; from Goulburn, 787 ingots copper, 4 tons 10 cwt.; from Clwydd Siding, 3 tons 14 cwt. 2 qrs.; total, 31 tons 2 cwt.

Death in the Bush of the Brothers Prout.—Referring to the death of the brothers Prout, who some weeks ago were lost in the western bush in Queensland and perished from thirst, the Darling Downs Gazette furnishes the following affecting picture of the discovery of the bodies:—"The sight was a sad and mournful one. There were two others perished besides the Prouts, making four in all. The two brothers were found lying close together, clasping each other's hands. The brotherly love that had existed between them through life continued in the hour of death. The bodies of the other two white men lay a short distance apart. Twelve horses also lay close at hand. All had evidently perished through thirst, as rations were found in the pack saddle-bags. The party had not succeeded in reaching the Port Darwin telegraph line, and they could not have travelled more than eighteen or twenty days when they had to succumb to their privations. While writing of the disaster to Messrs. Prout, we regret to state that as yet no more news have been received of the missing men on their way to Adelaide. It is sorrowful to learn from our correspondent in the Warrego district that nearly all hope has been given up of their ever turning up. It is almost certain that they have perished."

Sericulture.—A sentence which appears in the report of the Hon. J. Bowie Wilson's speech, at the matineé given by Mrs. Bladen Neill, on Saturday, is calculated to create a wrong impression as to the extent of the cultivation of mulberry trees with a view to sericulture. It was stated "that Mrs. Neill had, at the present time, a large number of mulberry trees planted, and expected to have 150 in full growth next year." We understand that, at the present time, there are fully 50,000 trees growing, belonging to Mrs. Neill and the ladies of the Association. The planting of the trees is still going on, and is expected to increase largely from year to year.

The Act of a Lunatic.—Those who have heard and those who have never heard of the extraordinary occurrence of a lunatic breaking the celebrated Portland Vase in the British Museum are reminded that a true copy of this great work will be submitted for public competition at Mr. Bird's sale, Edgecliff House, corner Edgecliff Road and Ocean-street, this day, at 11 a.m.—Bradley, Newton, and Lamb, auctioneers.—Advt.

The Sydney Morning Herald.

TUESDAY, JULY 9, 1878.

The claim for a railway to connect the Northern line with Sydney has been treated as a counterpoise to the claim for a railway from Sydney to the Illawarra district. Both would be in some sense, and to a certain extent, railway lines competing with water carriage. But when Mr. Sutherland, in his reply to the deputation from the North, expressed surprise at the advocacy of the proposed Sydney and Northern railway, by men who had opposed the South Coast railway on the ground that it would compete with water carriage, he made use of an argument which can be turned in another direction, and the effect of which, when so turned, the Government will do well to consider. As Mr. Sutherland has often said before, a comprehensive railway policy is being matured by the Government. That policy, it is to be presumed, will be submitted as a whole, and the Government will be prepared to stand or fall by it. Whether the construction of a line from Sydney to the Great Northern line is to be a part of that policy is a question that Ministers will have to decide; and so also is the question whether they should or should not include in it the project of an Illawarra railway. But if they include the latter, in spite of the argument against competing with water carriage, it is difficult to see how, on that ground, the former can be excluded. It is to be observed, however, that the question, as submitted by the deputation the other day, is not so completely one of competition between railway and water-carriage as Mr. Sutherland appeared to think. If the connecting point were at Newcastle, it might be so; but if the junction were at Singleton, or further north, the case would be materially altered. The argument about water-carriage has been used by men who thought the interests of Newcastle were in danger; but the deputation did not consist of Newcastle men, and its members were not compromised by the opposition to the Illawarra project.

The Northern railway project is, moreover, a great deal more than a mere counterpoise to the Illawarra railway project. It may be taken for granted that both will have to be carried into execution some day or other. It is to a large extent a question of time in both cases; but the time for constructing the one line may come before the time for constructing the other, and there are some weighty considerations that go far towards determining the point of precedence. If the Illawarra line were made, it would be made for the purpose of carrying a trade that has yet to be created, and the magnitude of which is necessarily a matter of estimate only. If Sydney were connected by rail with the Great Northern line, the work would be undertaken for the purpose of carrying a trade that is already in existence, and the magnitude of which is a matter of calculation, from actual records. The problem in this case would be a comparatively simple one. Of course the cost of the connecting line would have to be estimated; but the estimate having been made, and the annual charge for interest having been ascertained, the net profits upon the connecting line could be calculated upon the basis of the traffic towards and from Sydney, which the existing line, north of the connecting point, now carries.

If the point of junction were at or near Singleton, the books of the existing railway should show how much of the traffic north of Singleton has Sydney for its terminus or starting-point; and this would give a basis of calculation much more worthy of reliance than any mere estimate of a trade which is simply expected to grow up after a proposed line is constructed. There is abundant reason for the belief that if the Northern district were connected by railway with the metropolis a great development of traffic in coal, live stock, timber, and agricultural produce would shortly follow. But the point here to be observed is that, irrespective of any such development, the actual trade and traffic between the North and Sydney which the railway now carries furnishes peculiarly valuable data for calculation.

If the Government take a favourable view of the general policy of connecting the Northern line with Sydney, the questions of route and point of junction would call for careful consideration. With a connecting-line that branched off near Singleton, there would be the surer prospect of securing the trade of the more northerly districts; but, at the same time, the traffic and the profits on the line from Singleton to Newcastle would be proportionately diminished. On the other hand, if the junction were made at some point near to Newcastle, the railway from Newcastle to Sydney would be exposed to a closer competition with the steamers for the trade of the more northerly districts, whilst it would have a better chance of competing for the trade of the Lower Hunter. The balance of advantages and disadvantages in these and other respects would have to be struck; and of course the relative length and costliness of the two routes would have to be compared before coming to a decision.

It was justly remarked by a member of the deputation that our railway system would never be complete whilst there was such a gap between the Northern and the Southern districts. With this gap bridged over by the proposed new line, it would be possible within a few years to travel by rail from Brisbane to Melbourne—probably to Adelaide. What the precise money value of completing this magnificent sweep of railway communication would be, is not a thing to be computed, or expressed in figures. But it will hardly be denied that the permanent interests of the colonies, as a group, would be promoted by increasing the facilities of intercourse between their capitals. And, although this consideration might be regarded by some as of secondary moment, under other conditions it should be remembered that, under the actual circumstances, the tendency would be to promote the growth of an intercolonial trade already struggling for expansion. It is quite possible to exaggerate the interrupting influence of this gap of seventy-five miles in the circuit of our main railway system; but the desirability of having it filled up is in itself a thing that cannot be disputed.

The effect of constructing the proposed line would undoubtedly be to promote the concentration of trade in Sydney; and it will be for the Government to consider whether that would be a good or or a bad effect for the colony as a whole. In answering that question, it will be well to observe that concentration is favoured by the tendencies of the times. At the present stage of Australian affairs the competition for the trade of the interior is between Sydney, Melbourne, and Adelaide. And, whilst the ultimate winning of the race will depend upon a variety of causes, one of the most potent will be the possession of the greatest facilities for concentration. Other things being equal, the best market will be found where there is the largest trade, and trade will gravitate to the place where it is understood there is the best market. The trade of Riverina has been of value to Melbourne not merely because of the profit made directly from it, but also, because it has increased the importance of Melbourne as a market, and thereby given it greater opportunities for commanding trade from other districts. If the trade that now centres in Sydney were split up and distributed amongst several minor ports, the effect would be to increase the relative importance of Melbourne, to which, in time, Sydney itself and the other places of shipment would become mere outports. The ocean-carrying trade is steadily falling under the control of the large steamers, and the large steamers will go where there are good ports and the largest markets.

The entire correspondence between Lord Normanby and Sir George Grey, as published in the New Zealand Gazette, contains many more points of interest than it was possible to incorporate in the brief telegram on which we have previously commented. The correspondence has been conducted with considerable ability on both sides, and will no doubt be very frequently referred to in discussions of a similar character; for, though it is not free from the localisms and personal references involved in the controversy which gave rise to it, it discusses broad and deep doctrines which will have many applications.

There is one point raised in Sir George Grey's remarks which, under somewhat different circumstances, has been raised in Victoria, and that is the unfairness of having an appeal made to a distant authority by one of the parties to a dispute. When a Governor states a case in which he is in no way whatever personally implicated, he may be expected to state it with fulness and impartiality, but when he is submitting his own conduct as against his Ministers, as in the case of New Zealand; or his own conduct in support of his Ministers, as was the case in Victoria; and when his own conduct has been the subject of public discussion in the colony, stoutly supported by one party, and as strongly impugned by the other, then it requires a very great effort and judicial impartiality to put the whole of the case as strongly for the one side as for the other. The Secretary of State in Downing-street will have to take note of this: and as every word there used is carefully weighed, and its exact meaning is often disputed, they will have to be chary in the degree of their condemnation, or the opposite. But, while so far as personal animosities are concerned, the expressions of approval or disapproval towards a Governor are what excited antagonists will principally fasten upon, the serious concern of those who are interested in the principles of government will turn on the broad questions at issue, and on the policy laid down or accepted by the Downing-street authorities as those which, in their view, are best adapted to regulate the intercourse between the mother country and its dependencies, and to determine the position and function of the Imperial representative in the colonies.

The first point on which Lord Normanby was at issue with Sir George Grey was as to a nomination to the Legislative Council on the eve of a confidence debate. The Governor was unwilling to do it under the circumstances, but willing to do it if the debate terminated favourably to the Government. In spite of his reasons, which were verbally given, Sir George Grey made an official recommendation in favour of the appointment, and in his communication referred to the reasons verbally given. The Governor replied in writing, and this memorandum, on the written request of Sir George Grey, was laid before Parliament. Then it was declared to be a breach of privilege for the Governor to refer to anything pending in Parliament, such, for instance, as a confidence debate. We discussed this subject at the time, and expressed the opinion, which we see no reason to alter, that it was contrary to practice and contrary to common sense for a Governor to be ignorant, or to profess to be ignorant, of what was going on in Parliament. Lord Normanby, however, rested his case simply on the ground that, in sending the document to the Assembly he had acted on the advice of his Minister, who was therefore responsible. The Governor referred the matter home, notwithstanding the assertion of Sir George Grey that the Governor was not responsible to the Secretary of State in the matter. The Earl of Carnarvon replies on the two points, first, that under the Constitution of New Zealand the Governor is bound to communicate to the Secretary of State any difference of opinion which may arise as to his responsibility, in relation to the responsibility of his Ministers in any particular case, and, secondly, that so long as the Ministers retain office, they and not the Governor are solely responsible to the local Parliament for the Governor's acts. He adds that he does not see how there can be any question as to the correctness of this statement of the position and duty of the Queen's representative, and the relations between the different branches of the Colonial legislature. As the responsibility of producing the document rested with the Ministers, their continuance in office was taken as showing that the House did not feel there was any serious cause of complaint.

The next correspondence relates to the advice which Sir George Grey gave to dissolve without supplies. Lord Normanby gives as his reason for refusing that advice "that it would have been placing the exercise of the royal prerogative openly and entirely in the hands of the House." The Earl of Carnarvon acknowledges this letter, without expressing any opinion on its subject matter, though the question raised in it is obviously similar to one that had been previously discussed in New South Wales.

The next letter refers to Sir George Grey's practical refusal to have the advice of Sir William Jervois on the defences. It fell to Sir Michael Hicks-Beach to answer this letter; he simply approves the course the Governor took in the matter, which was to revert to Sir George Grey's views.

The next correspondence refers to the attempt, on the part of Sir George Grey to get rid of the Land Bill by not recommending it for the Governor's signature. The Governor refused to connive at this, on the ground that he would be lending himself to "something little short of a trick upon Parliament." The Secretary of State, in a short note, simply approves of the action he took.

The next letter refers again to the vexed question of a dissolution. Sir George Grey, who had resigned when he was first refused, pressed for it again, but Lord Normanby said that there was nothing to go to the country on, except a question of confidence or no confidence in Sir George Grey's Government, that, so far as measures were concerned, the policy of the previous Administration had been substantially adopted, and that the bill for redistributing the representation would require a dissolution after the close of the next session. He emphatically denied the doctrine laid down by Sir George Grey that a dissolution was a matter as to which the Governor had no right to exercise any discretion, or that he was bound to grant it whenever the Government of the day asked for it. The Secretary of State says that, after reading the correspondence with the care and attention which the subject demands, he felt bound to express his dissent from the views which Sir George Grey advances, and which would seem unduly to limit the prerogative of the Crown. He states distinctly that the responsibility must rest with the Governor, who, while giving the greatest attention to the representations of his advisers, is bound to consider the interests of the colony, as well as the claims of the respective parties in Parliament, and that if he thinks proper to decline the advice tendered, both law and practice empower him to do so.

The next document is a very able statement by Sir George Grey as to what he thinks the proper relations between the Governor and the Cabinet. There is a reply by the Governor and a rejoinder by the Minister, but we must leave any remarks on this document to another opportunity.

The Late Mr. A. H. C. Macafee.—Many of our readers will regret to hear of the death of Mr. Macafee, who for the last 25 years was honourably connected with mercantile life in this city. The deceased gentleman was born in the North of Ireland. He arrived in this colony about 25 years ago, and shortly afterwards became connected with the house of Messrs. A. Macarthur and Company. He was admitted as a partner about 20 years since, and took the leading part in the affairs of the firm. Mr. Macafee has been cut off in the prime of life, being only 48 years of age. He had been suffering for several months from an affection of the liver, but until a short time ago it was not anticipated that his illness would prove fatal. Although several times urged strongly to enter upon political life, Mr. Macafee did not see his way clear to do so. The main incidents of his colonial life are therefore connected with commerce and numerous local companies. He was regarded as a man of genial and generous disposition, and for these qualities especially was highly esteemed. He has left a widow (daughter of the late Hon. George Allen), one son, and two daughters. He died yesterday, at his residence, Avona, Glebe Point; and he will be buried in the family vault at Haslem's Creek on Thursday morning. The procession is to leave the chapel at Toxteth Park, at 9 o'clock.

THE MINISTERS FOR WORKS AND JUSTICE AT WAGGA WAGGA.

[By Telegraph.]

[From our Special Reporter.]

WAGGA WAGGA, Monday.

Messrs. Sutherland and Leary inspected the public buildings to-day, and subsequently received a deputation from the aldermen and townspeople, who urged the Government to purchase the road and bridge across the Murrumbidgee. Mr. Sutherland replied that if the Bridge Company named a price, he would submit their offer to the Cabinet.

The Ministers attended a concert to-night, in aid of St. Michael's school. Mr. Leary will leave to-morrow for Albury, and Mr. Sutherland for Sydney.

The Wages of Shoemakers.—As we have received some letters questioning the accuracy of the statement in the labour summary published in the Herald of Friday last, that shoemakers can earn from £2 10s. to £3 10s. per week, we have been led to make some special inquiries upon the subject. We find that good steady workmen can earn more than stated in the labour summary. At one of the largest boot manufactories in Sydney the wages book shows the earnings of the men to range from £1 15s. to £4 1s., many earning £3 and over. These amounts are paid to makers; finishers earn up to £3 7s. per week, and sometimes go to £4. At another establishment where the best bespoke sewn work is done the men are paid at rates from 10s. a pair, and they can on an average make from five to six pairs of boots a week. A third place where bespoke peg-work is done men earn £3 a week. These amounts are paid, it need scarcely be said, to good workmen. In the shoemaking trade, as in many other trades, a large number of the men work but few days in the week, and their wages on pay day are, as a consequence, much less than those of the man who has kept away from the public-house. Causes might arise to prevent a steady man from obtaining constant work, but generally speaking a good workman can find sufficient to do to enable him to earn at least £3 a week.

New South Wales at the Paris Exhibition.—On the 15th May his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, with the Princess of Wales and the Crown Prince of Denmark, visited the New South Wales section of the Paris Exhibition and minutely inspected the exhibits. On leaving his Royal Highness said to the secretary, "You have a magnificent collection, showing the natural wealth of your country, and I am happy to say it is exquisitely arranged."

Lyster's Opera Company.—The opera season at the Victoria Theatre was opened last night with "La Perichole," and a very full house was present to witness the performance. The company is not a very strong one, but it contains some old favourites, and the music went well throughout. The choruses were excellent, and most of the songs were very nicely rendered. Containing several very favourite airs the opera is one that is sure to please when well performed, and the applause last night was loud and frequent. Moreover, opera in Sydney at the present time brings a very agreeable change from the long and rather dreary dramatic season we have experienced at the theatres, and however indifferent may be the voices brought together at the present time to produce operatic music, the public will be inclined to overlook deficiencies in the satisfaction of having something fresh in the way of amusement to patronise. But indifferent musical talent is not the characteristic of the company which performed last night. There are no great voices among them, but there are several very pleasing ones, and they sang to very good effect. Miss Clara Thompson and Mr. H. Bracy acted the two principal characters, and succeeded in impersonating the street singers with much success. Their first appearance on the stage was the signal for a hearty reception from the audience, and they were on good terms with the house throughout the night. We have had here actresses who have achieved greater success as La Perichole, but none who exhibit in the performance more archness and vivacity than Miss Thompson did. She was in excellent voice, and sang with considerable taste and expression, especially in the letter song, "I adore thee." Piquillo is an old character in the hands of Mr. Bracy, and it need only be said that he was as good as ever in it. The part of the Viceroy, which was made familiar to operagoers here by Mr. Farley's admirable acting and singing, was allotted last night to Mr. C. H. Templeton. Mrs. J. H. Fox took her old character of First Cousin, and Mr. George Leopold again sent every one into convulsions by his antics after his "twelve long years" of imprisonment. Mr. John Forde and Mr. G. A. Johnson represented the Viceroy's ministers. The dresses were all that could be desired, and the scenery was good. Altogether the opera was produced in a very creditable way, and the season promises to be a successful one.

Theatre Royal.—There was a very good attendance at the Theatre Royal last night to witness the second production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The play was considerably curtailed in consequence of its having been found too lengthy on Saturday night, and in its altered form went very smoothly indeed. Mrs. Scott-Siddons sustained the parts allotted to her with quite her wonted success; and Mr. Chaplin, who was the St. Clair of the piece, acted with a great deal of success, and sang "To Eva in Heaven" very pleasingly. Miss Alice Deorwyn, as usual, acquitted herself very creditably, and her rendering of "Massa's in the cold, cold ground," was deservedly applauded. The scenic effects were well managed, and altogether the representation was a highly successful one.

Queen's Theatre.—At the Queen's Theatre, last night, a new piece was produced, entitled "Pink Dominoes," which, judging from the favour it was received with by a large audience, promises to become very popular. The play is the broadest kind of comedy—in fact, bordering upon farce. It abounds with the elements of fun, and a careful attention to the text on the part of all the actors would make it a most unobjectionable performance. The plot is founded upon the jealousy felt by two young married ladies of their husbands. Each are boastful of the amount of confidence they can repose in their spouse, but at the same time have a secret and repressed fear that the confidence is misplaced. In order to allay their doubts, or prove the truth, it is arranged by the wives to invite their husbands by anonymous notes to visit Cremorne Gardens. Living in the family of one of the wives is a young maid supposed to be the very pattern of virtue, and propriety. The absence of her mistress, on what she knows to be a mission of pleasure, gives her, she thinks, also a right to an evening's enjoyment, and she promises to meet a young gentleman at the Gardens. This young man happens to be a member of the family who resides with his uncle. The uncle is married to a stern old lady who detests all the vanities of the world; and her husband, not sharing her ideas on the subject has occasionally to invent small falsehoods with the object of obtaining an evening's amusement. On this evening he leaves home on the pretence of visiting a sick friend, but instead goes to Cremorne and makes an engagement to sup with a young lady, who leaves him abruptly after drinking his champagne. The incidents arising out of the meeting of all the dramatis personæ are most amusing, and keep the audience in roars of laughter until the fall of the curtain. The two principal characters—Mr. Joskin Tubbs and Sophy Graythorn—are played by Mr. and Mrs. Bates respectively. The parts require a considerable amount of dramatic ability, and it is almost needless to say they were done full justice to. Miss Kate Douglas, as Lady Maggie Wagstaff, deservedly won the approbation of the audience. The other characters were in the main creditably played.

Rainbow Revels.—The entertainment of the Stewart family at the School of Arts was crowded last night, and seemed to meet with no less appreciation than on the first night of its representation.

Guild Hall.—At the Guild Hall last night, Mr. D'Arcy Read gave an exhibition of his spectroscope to a tolerably good audience. Tobin's Phantasma—Ye Past, Present, and Future—also formed part of the entertainment.

The Skating Rink.—The skating rink performances at the Temperance Hall have been attended by considerable numbers of persons, who seem to enter into the sport with much ardour, the present weather being of course particularly suitable for the active exercise which is required. Yesterday afternoon both ladies and gentlemen took part; and again in the evening the room was open, and the sport in active operation, and there was a good number of skaters.

Catholic Young Men's Literary Society.—The fifth half-yearly meeting of the Catholic Young Men's Literary Association was held on Tuesday evening last, in St. Mary's Seminary. The President, the Rev. C. P. F. Collingridge, occupied the chair. After the secretary's report and treasurer's balance-sheet had been read and adopted, the meeting proceeded to the election of officers, which resulted as follows:—Patron, his Grace the Archbishop of Sydney (Dr. Vaughan); president, the Rev. C. P. F. Collingridge; vice-president, Mr. Egan; treasurer, Mr. J. Mooney; editor of M.S.S. Journal Mr. J. W. Fay; librarian, Mr. T. Quinn.

SINKING OF A RIVER STEAMER.

(By Telegraph.)
(From our own Correspondent.)
COROWA, Monday.

The river steamer Rob Roy, from Corowa to Echuca, laden with flour and general merchandise, struck on a snag near Boomanoomana station; and though every effort was made to keep her afloat, she sank in seven feet of water. The barge belonging to her, on which were one hundred and fifty tons of flour, from Levin's Corowa mills, is stuck on a sandbank some miles higher up the river. The weather is frosty, and the river is falling. It is thought that the steamer can be raised without much damage if the river does not rise rapidly.

THE VICTORIAN PARLIAMENT.

(By Telegraph.)
(From our own Correspondent.)
MELBOURNE, Monday.

Parliament opens to-morrow at 2 o'clock. In the Legislative Council the address will be moved by the Hon. T. à'Beckett, and seconded by Mr. Read; and in the Legislative Assembly by Mr. Pearson and Mr. Mason. His Excellency the Governor's speech will open with a statement that war has been happily averted by the energetic action of the Imperial Government. During the recess progress has been made with the defences of the colony, which will be pushed forward in place of those proposed by Sir William Jervois. A cable conference has been held in consequence of frequent interruptions owing to the colonies being dependent on one line; and the result of the conference had been satisfactory. Ministers hope to announce the speedy union of all the colonies on the subject. Reference will be made to the Paris Exhibition, and that it is gratifying to learn that Victoria made a highly creditable show, and secured the flattering opinion of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The estimates have been framed with a due regard to economy, and the revenue continues in a highly satisfactory condition. The attempt to embody the unwritten Constitution of England within the rigid limits of statute law was found not to be a success, the written Constitution being wanting in that elasticity attributed to its prototype; and it is intended to introduce a bill to remedy the same, and an appeal is made to the patriotism of the colonists to give it effect, and do away with dead-locks. The subject of railway extension has received the attention of Ministers who have prepared a comprehensive plan to meet the wants of settlement, by opening up communication to districts taken up by selectors; and the wants of commerce by the construction of two main lines, which, at different points, will tap the South Australian border, and assist in securing to Victoria the commerce of central Australia. The purchase of the Hobson's Bay railway property will render necessary the floating of a loan which will embrace waterworks, public works, including the Law Courts, the completion of Parliament houses and building, and new schools required by the progress of Education Act. The International Exhibition of 1880 has been finally decided on, and an eligible and central site has been secured. Various commissions sat during the recess, and their labours in due course will be embodied in legislation. After the passing of the Reform Bill, the Electoral Reform Bill, Land Act Amendment, and Supreme Court Judicature Bills will be introduced.

Unsightly Buildings.—Like many others, we were under the impression that buildings that encroached on streets or wayrights, though allowed to continue for a time, could not be either rebuilt or materially repaired. Thanks, however, to a faultiness which is quite common in this colony—and, indeed, everywhere else—the law on the subject is utterly defective. A building shall not be "rebuilt in the whole or any part," "nor shall any addition or alteration be made to the same;" but it may be repaired, and this repairing has so latitudinarian a meaning in the eyes of the law and of building men that it is scarcely possible to imagine how any structure, no matter what was done with it, could come within the meaning of the Act. This playful interpretation, therefore, means that a verandah, such as that very ugly one indeed at the corner of Hunter and Bligh streets, and which encroaches on both streets, may remain there so long as it can be made to hold together by repairing, renovating, &c. It is certainly time the law on the subject were altered.

The Telephone.—We have received from the publishers, Messrs. W. MacDonnell and Co., of George-street, a pamphlet written by Mr. W. MacDonnell, on the Telephone, with instructions how to use it. In the introductory chapter the author states that he does not intend "to enter upon the consideration of the principles of physical science involved in the construction of these wonderful instruments." However, he describes in plain and intelligible language the component parts of the telephone, and renders the inception still more clear by means of neatly drawn diagrams. He gives full and complete directions how to fix the parts of the instrument, and how to use it, and he further explains the causes of obstruction that may arise, with instructions how to remedy the defects, if any. Armed with this little work an amateur telephonist need have little difficulty in conversing with his friends at any reasonable distance.

Natural History of Australia.—A correspondent writes:—"It has appeared to me a great pity that there is no good book published on the natural history of New South Wales or Australia. There are a few books published relating to certain branches, among which may be mentioned Gould's "Birds of Australia;" but I think we have no really good hand book of the natural history of Australia. A hand book of the description indicated would be valuable to recent arrivals, to school boys, and young persons. It would, if accurately written by able persons and suitably illustrated, have a very large sale. Frequently in the country, when some strange bird is shot, it is found that no one knows what it is. It will, therefore, be perceived that the young are growing up in ignorance, not from any fault of theirs, but from the want of a suitable guide. If several of the literary gentlemen of the colony would take the work in hand and each contribute, we should have a valuable and interesting manual.

The Crew of the R. M. S. Brisbane.—At the Water Police Court, yesterday, a cross-case of assault was heard, which afforded a good deal of light as to the difficulty shipmasters have to contend with in dealing with Chinese sailors. The usual custom of captains who engage crews of this description is to make an agreement with a person denominated a "serang" to provide the number of people required for the respective departments—the serang forming one of the crew, and, to use an Americanism, "bossing the crowd." It is to him that his countrymen look for protection, and they are unwilling to obey the orders of any ship's officer unless they have his sanction. It will be thus seen how difficult the management of a large crew becomes when sole dependence is placed on this kind of labour, if the "serang puts his back up" and refuses to co-operate. The serang of the Brisbane seems to have had all the customary influence over his compatriots on board whilst he had a decided objection to bow to authority. Mr. Harris, one of the engineers, charged him yesterday with inflicting a severe wound upon his chest, whilst the celestial in a cross summons averred that the engineer had grossly maltreated him, even to the extent of pulling his pig-tail. Both assaults were stated to have been committed on the 1st July, when the ship was at sea. The Bench, after consideration, decided to fine both parties. The fine of the serang amounted with costs to £2 11s. 10d., and he of course refused to pay, preferring the alternative of seven days in gaol. The whole of the Chinese crew attended the Court en masse to watch the proceedings, and declared their intention of not going on board unless their comrade was immediately liberated. The steamer was announced to sail at 12 o'clock for Melbourne, and the captain had, of course, to pay the fine and restore to freedom the recalcitrant seaman. When the latter, however, got outside the doors of the lock-up the pugnacity of his character again asserted itself. He positively declined to go on board the steamer, and prevailed upon the other members of the crew to follow his example. After a good deal of persuasion the captain was obliged to give twenty of the men into custody, on a charge of disobeying orders, and they were accordingly locked up.

Justices at Adelong.—A correspondent writes to complain of the want of honorary magistrates at Adelong. He states that in consequence of there being only one justice resident there, considerable inconvenience was caused to those applying for licenses at the last Court.

OUR LAND REFORMERS.

IV.

In contrast with the method of colonization sketched in my last paper, it may be worth while to present to the readers of the Herald, in view of a Land Reform Bill, said to be forthcoming, some account of a tract of country under the active operation of the present law—or, rather, laws, for they are endless.

You reformers, who have not seen such a map as that of Candowan, can hardly know or realise how the "Public Estate" is being dealt with under the pressure of the two rival interests of selection and squatting.

It would give me much satisfaction to lay this map before you, and for the present it may not be out of place if I describe the locality represented, in its various stages of occupation. In this way, you will have before you a fair specimen of what takes place when squatters and selectors come fully into collision.

Some reformers, in their deliverances, ignore the Squatting occupancy altogether, or they refer to it as a merely transitory, unimportant, or immaterial state of things. Such views give evidence of want of knowledge, both of the historical past of the colony and the economic facts of the present; or they evince great insincerity and want of candour in dealing with these facts.

Nevertheless, however popular and influential such views may be, Squatting has been for long, and continues to be, the most important fact connected with our national industry, and indeed it underlies and mainly supports the whole fabric. With all the objections that may be truly and rightfully adduced against the squatting system, both on industrial and on social grounds, still, as the form in which our principal industry, grazing, is, for the time, chiefly carried on, it must be admitted to be the main source of support to the community of New South Wales.

I am aware that few or no candidates for election have told this much to their constituents; in fact, many hustings-orators still persist in denouncing the pursuit as an abuse, though as yet they have wholly failed to discover any efficient substitute for it. For all that, the statement above made is the absolute truth, which no number of votes or resolutions passed by majorities can alter; and, until this fact is fully comprehended by you reformers, you will be working in the dark, and none of your schemes of reform will hold water.

Ruminate over this, then, reformers—that, to try to deal with the Land Question as if no such thing as squatting existed, will be just as practicable and successful as if, in dredging the sea-bottom, you pretended to ignore the briny element.

For this reason, then, I present you with some views on squatting matters. Candowan is what is known as a squatting station. It is situated on the Narghil River, of which it occupies some twenty miles frontage, and its back boundary is the Dividing Range separating the Narghil from the Winandry, the distance from the frontage being also about twenty miles, so that the station is nearly a square. You will not find any such name as Candowan in the list of runs. The reason of this is that the station or run—for the terms are often used indifferently—consists of some dozen different original tenders, runs, or blocks, these two last terms being notoriously and universally synonymous—Messrs. Garrett and Daly's deliverances notwithstanding. In place of Candowan, you may find names such as Yarraman Billy, 1, 2, and 3, Dingo Camp Upper, Dingo Camp Lower, Merrigang, 1 to 4, and so on. These names represent the different runs or blocks forming Candowan station, and they may be supposed, if one chooses, to be of aboriginal origin, or to have been adopted, for want of better names, by the pioneer squatters who first marked out the country.

By the way, it would be much better if such blocks were all consolidated in one well-defined station, under one name, as has been done in Queensland. That would simplify matters much, which are at times hazy. You reformers are none the worse for having explained to you how a squatting station is formed; and now, if you wish to build up a theory of reform on facts—the only safe foundation—let me ask you to follow closely, step by step, all that takes place on Candowan, as thus you will secure the key to the modern question. The history of one squatting station will serve as a text-book for understanding all that concerns our in-land country. Like all other stations then, this one was discovered and occupied by pioneers or explorers, without aid from or expense to Government, and in fact without the knowledge of any official. For years it was equally outside of survey bounds and police protection, and it became known only by its wool and other produce reaching Sydney.

It is unnecessary to follow minutely each stage of its progress during twenty years till it took its present form; suffice it to say, that when Free Selection became the law of the land, Candowan had already been sold and bought three times. The last proprietor had bought, in 1858, the purchase being 30,000 sheep at 20s. per head, the net value of sheep then being 9s. per head. In other words, he gave a money premium of 11s. per head, or a sum of £16,500 for the good-will of the run, not, mark me, for the "land," but for the "leasehold." To meet the bills he gave in payment, and to make the country fit to carry the increase to which he looked for his profit, he had to get money accommodation, which was then expensive; so that when the district in which Candowan is situated was in 1865 thrown open to selection, he was very far from being the wealthy squatter which those outside these secrets assumed him to be. All he had in the world was sunk, and to have any chance of recovering enough to maintain his family and pay his debts, he would need to have the undisturbed use of his run for some years, and fair average seasons as well. Even without the additional pressure of selection, he would most likely have an up-hill job, as he had to pay heavy interest besides other expenses on his advance. So selection found him, like many others, with quite as much as he could do, and placed him in an undoubted "fix."

He had, in the ordinary course of his occupation, acquired possession of the station through a transaction that was in every way sanctioned by law and custom—a transaction, too, not founded on fraudulent scrip or shadowy mining interests, but as essentially connected with the real fibre of New South Wales—the work of the country and the well-being of the people—as the deposits in the Savings' Bank, or the streets and wharfs of this city. He was, by his work, hurting nobody, and doing good to not a few, directly and indirectly; and moreover, it was only through such a purchase that he could enter upon the pursuit he was used to, namely, the breeding of stock. Without such operations as this purchase, the earnings of a good many people, lodged in the banks and invested in those advances, would have been as good as lost money, and moreover, in the state of things still existing, there would be no other field open for the capital and enterprise of such men as our lessee. You see there are more ways than one of looking at squatting questions. Consequently the lessee, with such an outlay, and with such contingencies, was by no means willing or ready to give up any part of his run to anybody, and neither would you or any other man be under such circumstances. He was, in fact, one of hundreds more who were engaged in carrying on the work of the country in the only way that the institutions of the day permitted.

It has been said that the Act of 1861 did him no injury, as through it he had received due, legal, and equitable notice that all his squatting rights ceased by a certain day, the country being then wanted for agricultural settlement.

In all questions affecting common interests, reform and reconstruction are inevitably daily necessities. Sometimes the need of change arises from abuses that have to be corrected—sometimes from the enlarged wants of growing communities—or from natural development of some other kind. If the change is carried out with justice to all concerned by a well-considered method, in harmony with natural conditions, and the facts of the day, then it may be expected to bear fruit in wholesome reform. On the other hand, if a measure is marked by tyrannical vindictiveness—indifference to facts, and ignorance of every feature of the question except that forced into prominence by class antipathies—then, that is not reform—the tendency is towards destruction. It proceeds on the falsest of all suppositions, namely, that if you throw down that which you do not like, everything will go on well henceforth.

Now, let us sum up what this notice given by the Act of 1861 to the squatters amounted to. 1. Was its intent, with reference to squatting, just, or was it tyrannical? 2. Was its action well considered, in harmony with natural conditions, the facts of the day, and the experience of the colonists? 3. Was the professed object aimed at practicable or not?

The Reformers of 1861 had taught the public that the owner of Candowan and all his class were simply trespassers on the lands of the people—that any rights they pretended to were frauds on the State—and that they deserved no more consideration than any other outlaws. The squatters held the lands that should have been in the hands of the people; therefore they were robbers. The keeping of sheep on the natural grasses was an abuse, because it prevented the growth of wheat; therefore the squatters and their stock must be moved off. This is no exaggeration of the views that led to the Act of 1861.

Now let us see what the real facts were that were placarded in this perverted form.

We at once admit the existence of one fundamental grievance—the obstruction of settlement, and we allow to boot that the same was a national misfortune of a magnitude hardly capable of exaggeration. But here we join direct issue with the men of 1861, for we maintain that the squatting occupancy was not the cause of that obstruction.

Freehold settlement, as appearing yet in its original form in our old Settled Districts—the first and to this day the most successful stage in our colonization—was stopped by the price of 20s. per acre and the Wakefield system, and then—but not till then—squatting sprang into existence, contrary to the policy of Government, the pent-up energies of the colony thus forcing that outlet for themselves.

As soon as the change of law occurred, as soon as grants ceased to be issued, and the price of land was raised, all new comers and colonists starting in life went into squatting because there was no other channel open to them.

This state of things lasted for many years, and during all that time there was hardly any other field of production or active industry, and almost no access to the soil except through these squatting arrangements. Moreover, as the colony grew, all business interests became bound up with this chief industry. The realised wealth of the community, the savings of the poor as well as the surplus of the rich, were equally invested in it, and these grazing leaseholds, thus formed, passed from hand to hand for long under all the guarantees of acknowledged law and custom.

Now, the Act of 1861 proposed to expunge, to rub out, the titles of leaseholders so acquired. Our two first questions as to the justice and policy of the measure are pretty fairly answered by the foregoing facts. The third question, "Was the object proposed practicable," has now to be answered.

The consideration of this point brings before us an instance of collision between two powers, both of which are said by various authorities to be supreme, namely, the power of a legislative majority, and the constitution of things which we call natural law. The new Act had decreed the displacement of squatting by small agricultural, or rather tillage farms, in defiance of, or perhaps in disregard, or in ignorance of all the past experiences of the colonists. As was to be expected, the silent forces have set at nought the mandates of our statesmen, and it is admitted now that there are things which even an Assembly cannot do.

It would be difficult to find a more complete satire on human foresight than the contrast now presented in the actual results of selection as compared with its professed objects. These anomalies, however, raise no question as to the soundness of real freehold or homestead settlement legitimately founded on natural conditions. But nothing less than failure could be expected from a system of settlement which was to be supported entirely by small tillage farms—in the face of three well-known facts—namely:—

1. The variations of a climate hitherto unstudied and unknown; climate being a chief factor in farming of all kinds.

2. The habits of nearly all colonists of British parentage, who generally will do anything rather than cultivate the soil, and confine their ambition to either of two pursuits—namely, to become small squatters, or to open public-houses; and

3. The absence or distance of markets for produce.

In reality, the scheme of life gravely put forward as a substitute for the industry that was to be extinguished was just as rational, practical, and likely to be realised as if the Legislature had voted that Sydney harbour should be moved to the top of Mount Victoria. Moreover, from the very nature of the facts, the squatting occupancy could not be the merely temporary ephemeral arrangement that its opponents pretended—a mere trespass or abuse that could be got rid of readily by a Parliamentary measure or official action. So far from this, all past and present doings in connection with the pursuit showed that its roots struck deep down in the very foundations of the colony, and that it subsisted not on the good-will of Government, or on mere class pretensions, but on far more potent forces—the laws of economy and nature.

Still, for all that, there was nothing to prevent the legislators of the day voting, if they so chose, the abolition of the national industry, or of any other mathematical or fundamental law; but it by no means followed that in either the one case or the other nature and fact would conform to the vote.

The ill-considered recklessness of the measure becomes evident when we look at the question from a purely national point of view, apart from class differences. Maladministration had driven nearly all the productive energies of the colonists into one channel—that being squatting. Executive action had in very early times tried to smother squatting as well as freehold settlement; but as long as the grass grew, and there was an open frontier inland, no law or regulation could check the progress of the movement. Careless or unconscious of this fact, the authors of the selection law decreed that squatting must be put down. According to their views, the way to promote the interests of the colony was to place the one remaining productive industry under disabilities such as had burked the early form of occupation.

Now, surely in the name of common sense, one branch of production is better than none, especially if all others are made by law unprofitable or impossible. If a man has lost his right leg and has not procured a well-proved substitute, does he make it any better by trying to chop off the left?

Let us call the old system of freehold settlement "the right leg," and squatting "the left." The first was destroyed by Mr. Wakefield, and One Pound per acre; and the second thereon sprang up, lived, and grew, being the only form of occupancy that misgovernment could not destroy.

Now, with these facts explained, it should be clear that for the reform wanted in 1861, free selection was neither the honest nor the practical way to go to work.

Freehold settlement is one thing: free selection is another. The latter, with its indiscriminate promptings to spoil and black-mail, was just an attempt "to chop off the left leg"—an attempt suicidal as well as unjust, for no new industry as foretold has appeared, and the agricultural paradise is as far away as ever.

As for the owner of Candowan, all that he wanted was to get his own money back, and to get fair scope to carry out his work, but the law of selection threatened to place his interests at the mercy of every encroachment; not merely that having real settlement for its object, but also such as might be prompted by fraud, malice, or caprice. Thus weighted with debt, he found himself face to face with selection twelve years ago, and the struggle since has been constant, and the results dubious.

CAPRICORNUS.

CRIMINALS AND PRISON DISCIPLINE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—It is presumable that the object of all human governments and laws is to secure the greatest good to the greatest number. The reflective mind will see this in the operation of those laws which raise one man to a throne and consign another to a dungeon. Throughout the material and moral universe, compensation may be recognized as an established law. Ice, water, and vapour; vapour, water, and ice; fire and heat; night and day; positive and negative electrical forces, a tooth for a tooth. A man who plays with a deadly viper may expect to be bitten; a man who violates a national or moral law may expect to be punished in some way, and this correction is meted out to him as the Constitution has prescribed it should be. The misdemeanour and the felon; one man receives his flagellation; another his conge on the gallows. This is, however, what some fail to see; they soon discover that all vice is vice, and that all crime is crime; and in the innumerable disproportions of the moral world they discover unity. I fail to perceive that a man who walks a foot in "scoundrelism" is as bad as he who walks a mile. The moral about stealing a pin will hardly do to-day. If we admit of degrees of goodness, we may admit it on the side of vice:

"Nor seems it reason, he as much should sin
Who steals a cabbage plant, as he who in
The dead of night a temple breaks and brings
Away from thence the consecrated things."

This is forcibly illustrated in the doom of Belchazzar and the shivering wretch who steals a fagot with which to kindle a fire. One has a violent death, the other a month in prison. The question here turns from the nature of crime and degrees of punishment, to the method of discipline, and the sentiments entertained by some men towards the criminal, as the out-growth of a "healthy moral nature." For having read Mr. David Buchanan's letter in yours of Saturday on "Prison Discipline" over and over again, I came to the conclusion that never in my life had I read sentiments so ferocious, and arguments so illogical and misguiding, a perfect olla-prodrida of truth and fallacy, in which reason was distorted by our zeal and passionate resentment in such a way as to be utterly unbecoming one who professes to practice the benign precepts of Christ, and the prudent and enlightened maxims of philosophy. Mr. Buchanan says:—"I have said, that every healthy moral nature must hate the criminal scoundrel who compels you to lock him up in a prison." To back this up he quotes from Carlyle a passage crowded with unholy rhapsody. It is well known to the students of the illustrious orator of "Niagra, and After" that with all the mightiness of his intellect he occasionally sinks into the veriest rodomontadist. Furthermore, the man who considers the "Bible a book where correct guidance can be found" (and this Mr. Buchanan affirms he believes) may fare better than to go to the disciple of Lucretius, Goëthe, and Priestly for healthy Christian ideas. Mr. Buchanan repeats, with the fierce old seer, "Just hatred of scoundrels I say fixed irreconcilable, inexorable." It is this intemperate language, for which the Christian religion is offered as an apology, against which I protest. It is the sweeping trenchant inhumanity of it, against which I object.

A man may be a criminal and a "scoundrel;" he may be a criminal and not be a scoundrel, just as we find many scoundrels who are not criminals. Every right-thinking person will look with abhorrence on the man who has struck his wife, and with horror on the wretch who has kicked and beat out his wife's life. So will he also shrink from contact with a murderer. Yet in the first case, the murderer was insane from drinking to excess, and our own Government provided the whisky which sent him mad and unhinged the propensity to kill. And the other, as in some cases, was a murder perpetrated in a moment of unbridled passion, and, perhaps, under very provoking and exciting circumstances. Are such men fitter subjects for "hate irreconcilable, inexorable," or for the more Christian-like exercise of commiseration? But supposing the murder to have been done prepense, may be reasonable to consider what physiology has to report on such matters, for while good parents, like David, Solomon, and Junius Brutus have had iniquitous sons, yet does it more frequently happen that the bad parent bequeaths to his offspring the heritage which directs it to the gutter, the haunts of crime, the hulks, and to the scaffold. "God visits the sins of the fathers unto the third and fourth generation."

How often is the criminal the unhappy victim of organic conditions, in the arrangement of which he was never consulted? Lavator, and such eminent men as Drs. Todd, Lawrence, Hunter, and Carpenter recognise this. Had Bill Sykes left the world a son, it is more than probable that he would have figured more frequently in Newgate than St. Paul's. How many of those men and women who appear before your Magistrates and Judges, for every form of vice and crime, are mere links in the chain of cause and effect—the innocent instruments of an imperious succession of sequences, stretching so far back that they can never fathom, so persistent that they cannot avert them, and so sadly sweeping them on to the vortex that must swallow them, and to the God who will judge them. From the moment of inception in the strange organism which has in time to live, and breathe, and work, and fight, and die amongst men, there is interwoven that which fashions the drunkard, rogue, liar, and villain. And the laws which bring all this about are not only in harmony with divine edicts, but also with the teachings of science. Yet, in the face of this, a Christian gentleman would have us to follow the hapless criminal with "inexorable hatred." "Think ye they were sinners above all men on whom the Tower of Siloam fell?" Against that of Carlyle I quote from the "Third Advent Lecture," of Robertson, of Brighton. "The truth is we think much of crime, little of sin. There is many a murderer executed whose heart is pure and whose life is white compared with that of many a man who lives a respectable and even honoured life. David was a murderer. The Pharisees had committed no crime; but their hearts were rotten at the core. There was in the sin that which has no forgiveness. It is not a Christian but a barbarian estimate which ranks crime above sin, and takes murder for the chief of sins marked out for heaven's vengeance." Let us hate evil, and, if you will, hate the evil-doer with the greatest aversion and dislike, but not with the ferocious and malignant hatred of Carlyle and Mr. David Buchanan. Emerson contends that all of the divine in man is not extinguished, no matter how low he may fall. In the gutter, the prison, the madhouse, or condemned cell, there is some spot of God in him; and that virtue which stands greater than Faith and Hope may look beyond the crime and the criminal to the man for whom our laws have discovered a panacea which is supposed to aid his reform.

"How'e'er it be, it seems to me
'Tis only noble to be good;
Kind hearts are more than coronets"—

Pursuing the lawbreaker within the precincts of his "prison-house" with inveterate "blazing fiery hatred," is nothing less than an exhibition of impotent vindictiveness. It is as bad as the canaille on the imprisonment and execution of Marie Antoinette. It is easy to fulminate where you cannot crush. There was good done when Christ whipped out the money changers and cleared the Temple of thieves; but in what a mean light does Jupiter present himself when he struck Æsculapius, "With his forked lightning, to the Stygian Lake," for restoring Hippolytus from death to life. What are we to understand by this "Prison discipline?" It does not seem clear that this has been defined with any clearness. It means more than subjection to laws, rules, order, and to regulations; more than punishment to correct crimes; more than subordination to the authority of constitutionally delegated prison officials. It means also—education, cultivation and improvement, comprehending instruction in correct sentiments, manners, and morals. Punish your criminals, but educate them; swathe their limbs in chains, feed them on hominy, scourge their backs, lock them up in their cells, let them crack stones, grind at the mill, make roads,—punish the criminal that he may swallow every atom of the physic necessary to purge away his moral malady, but instruct and enlighten him. No "namby-pamby sentiment" this, or "cockering or whitewashing" this, but downright honest Christian duty. The prison is only a reformatory school, a house of correction; and the ulterior object of all forms of punishment is to improve, correct, reform, and reclaim. Bend the backbone of the ruffian to the iron heel of law and justice, but show him his moral deformity and the way he can get out of his horrible misshapenness. Any "Hate inexorable and irreconcilable" will not do it. Any inferior nature can hate. Carlyle can hate with no greater intensity than a clown. Ethics is a distinct department of science. In our Universities it is a distinct branch of study. Gaol chaplains will preach religion and morality, and do this work thoroughly; nevertheless, lectures on the chemistry of intoxicating drinks—on the physiology and pathology of the drunkard—on the profitableness of sobriety, industry, and economy—can do no harm. They can render much real benefit. Such discourses by efficient men will open out avenues of thought and kindle aspirations for good in the minds of men who have abandoned hope, and who feel a morbid pleasure in their solitude in hatching schemes which they carefully nurse for future practice. Many of those prisoners in Darlinghurst and elsewhere have sucked dishonesty and every form of monstrous badness with their mother's milk, been taught it on their father's knees, been environed with it all through life, and that which will aid their reform, is not "hate irreconcilable, inexorable," but true knowledge and true goodness of heart and head, not to palliate their punishment, but to fortify them against crime. Rev. gentlemen may look seriously after the souls and morals of such men; but there are other men well qualified to instruct their intellects. The first step to aid such hardened criminals to repentance, is to show them that society is prepared under reasonable conditions to remove its ban, and to efface the "broad arrow" which has marked their guilt. It is this physic of law which changes a reformable felon into a hardened brutal wretch. This "hate inexorable and irreconcilable" of Carlyle, and Mr. David Buchanan does it. In Virgil's Æneid we have—"Exuperat magis, ægrescitque medendo." ("His physic makes him worse, and sicker still.")

After such rancourous hostility and diabolical hygiene of "hate" it is refreshing to turn to "The Masque of Pandora," by Professor Longfellow:—

Never by lapse of time,
The soul defaced by crime
Into its former self returns again;
For every guilty deed
Holds in itself the seed
Of retribution and undying pain.
Never shall be the loss
Restored, till Helios
Hath purified them with his heavenly fires;
Then what is lost is won,
And the new life begun,
Kindled with nobler passions and desires.

FOOTBALL.

2nd University v. 2nd Wallaroo.

These football teams met on Moore Park on Saturday last. The Wallaroos having won the toss, the ball was kicked off by the University, who kept it well up to their opponents' goal, where Mackay, for the University obtained a touch down. At half time the University had one touch down to nothing. On play being resumed Thompson obtained another touch down for the University, but Fees, who tried for a goal, was unsuccessful. Shortly afterwards the Wallaroos succeeded in getting a touch down near the end of the University goal-line, and the ball being punted out was kept between the lines during the rest of the time; the game, therefore, resulted in a win for the University by one touch down. The University played with three, and the Wallaroo with one short of the full team. For the former M'Nanamy, Brennan, and Thompson, and for the latter Gerald and Douglas, especially distinguished themselves by their good play.

THE AUSTRALIAN CRICKETERS IN ENGLAND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—I read a letter from "R. D. D.," in your Herald of to-day, which I think, although prefixed by the statement that he "does not wish to run down the Australian team," tends to prove quite the reverse, inasmuch as no person so feeling, or any lover of fair play, could think otherwise than that great credit is due to them for their performances at home.

"R. D. D." states that the only strong teams our Eleven have met are the Notts, Gentlemen of England, and the Yorkshire County Eleven; and he remarks that by each of these the Australian Eleven were defeated in one innings. He is incorrect in alleging this, for the Yorkshire team has not yet defeated the Australian Eleven in one innings. They have twice met. On one occasion the Australian Eleven won with six wickets to spare, and on the other the Yorkshire Eleven had 26 runs to secure in their second innings in order to get a victory. They certainly got them without the fall of a wicket; but it was far from being a one innings' defeat, inasmuch as eleven, as good players as they, were all put out for 19 runs in the Marylebone match.

The Australian Eleven have met thirteen teams since their arrival in England. They have won six matches, lost four, and the remaining three were drawn; but undoubtedly in their favour. Of these matches five were country matches, one was with the renowned Gentlemen of England, another with the Marylebone club (which consists of most of the best players in England), and the remaining six with teams of eighteen and twenty-two, with which played some of the "cracks" that had met them in previous matches.

Let, therefore, "honour be accorded to whom honour is due," and let all believers in the motto that "fair play is bonny play" still continue, notwithstanding "R. D. D's" letter—to be proud of their "cornstalk" representatives at Home.

Yours obediently, H. J.

Sydney, 8th July, 1878.

The Turf.—The unexpected scratching of Bosworth for the Melbourne Cup has somewhat startled the sporting public. Before the appearance of the weights the colt had been heavily backed both right out and in doubles; and although, with 7 st. 7 lbs., he was looked upon as having been rather harshly treated, it is well that the pen was drawn through his name at such an early date, for, had he been left in the public would have sustained a still greater loss. Bosworth and Chester have been heavily backed for the V. R. C. Derby and the Melbourne Cup at 100s to 1; and after £15,000 had been booked, 100s to 2 was the best price offered. Bosworth has also been well supported in the double in conjunction with Calamia and Emily. For our Derby His Lordship is most in favour, at 6 to 4; and an impression having gained ground that Bosworth will not come to New South Wales in the Spring, 5 to 1 is freely offered against him. Nerissa, Emily, and Calamia appear to be most in favour for the Metropolitan Stakes; and Nerissa, Colima, Mileta, and Woolstone for the Hawkesbury Handicap. The double on the Hawkesbury Handicap and the Metropolitan is very popular just now, and prices range from 100 to 2 to 100 to 1, according to selections. Mr. Stewart's fine colt Kisbar died suddenly on Friday last. He was bred by Mr. Reynolds of Tocal, and was by Kelpie from Emery, and was thought to be one of the most promising colts in training. This evening, a general meeting of Tattersall's Club is to be held to consider a revision of the rules to be submitted by the committee.

Sale of Racehorses.—We have been requested to direct attention to the sale of Mr. Town's horses, in training, advertised to take place at Mr. Cornwell's stables, at Randwick, on Wednesday next, the 10th instant. They comprise, amongst others, Cap-a-pie (the St. Leger winner), Napper Tandy (who was a winner of several races during the past season), Astarté (sister to Richmond and Bosworth), and others of high and well-known breeding.

This day, at 11 a.m., Household Furniture.—Highly important sale of the whole of Mr. Bird's elegant household furniture, choice china, richly cut glass, best quality electroplate, valuable pictures, bronzes, &c., and a magnificent set silver-mounted harness. Bradley, Newton, and Lamb, auctioneers. Sale at Edgecliff House, near corner Ocean-street, and Edgecliff Road, this day, at 11 a.m.—Advt.

Epps's Cocoa.—Grateful and Comforting.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette. INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—As a member of the Agricultural Society of New South Wales will you courteously allow me space in your next issue. I have been a member some years, although not in any way connected with agricultural pursuits; and have cheerfully given my mite in the hope that it would assist in encouraging the natural industry of this country.

By postal card, I am most particularly requested to attend the special meeting of the members, which takes place on the 10th instant, to decide "whether the International Exhibition of 1879 is to be proceeded with or not?" I assume from this, that the Council of the Society honestly wish to ascertain the opinions individually and collectively of the whole body of the members. And such a course is just and right.

Circumstances will prevent me being present, but I should like to state my views. As a society whose object is the encouragement of the agricultural industry of New South Wales and the pursuits akin to it—a general International Exhibition is quite outside of the legitimate sphere of action of the Agricultural Society. Consequently, that it is unconstitutional that the funds of the members should be spent in this matter, even if the votes of a majority decided upon it. And it would not be an "International Exhibition"—for to be so truly it would require a movement of the whole colony, and the voice and special vote of its Legislative representatives. Already many of our members look upon our past proceedings and exhibitions as inconsistent, and a wide departure from what they ought to have been, that is, agriculture, produce, and the like, pure and simple. I have heard the views of many here, and from those whose opinions are entitled to respect, and, among those views so expressed, are that even in our local exhibitions the thing has been too frequent and overdone. That it would be better that two and even three years' funds were consolidated into one good strong Exhibition. That is a year or two of rest, and then a good effort for something superior. Something that would not need the attraction of a colonial Blondin risking his neck, an enchanted lady, or other such amusements to make it a solid success. Supposing there is an International Exhibition, we cannot foresee how it will terminate—whether it will be a success in a finance point of view, or a failure, leaving a heavy liability to be liquidated from some source or other. If the latter, then it will not be just to call upon those members who joined the Agricultural Society for the purpose of giving help and encouragement to colonial agricultural industry. They joined under the understanding that a specific sphere of operations would be adhered to, and the bounds thereof should be strictly and honestly kept guarded in all proceedings. There is still one course open—let the colony at large, and its Parliament as a whole, take the international part of the business—and let our society hold its Exhibition at the same time, but entirely separate on its own ground and on its own separate administration. And let our part of the business be to exhibit the best specimens of our natural produce alone. A pure and simple exhibit of New South Wales agricultural produce alone. I, for one, would cheerfully give, besides my annual subscription, a special donation in aid thereof, if those who are so much wealthier than myself, and the country and Parliament, will make a determined effort also.

But I do object (and as a member I have the right to object) that the Agricultural Society shall go outside its own bounds to do that which it has no constitutional right to do.

There is still another way, and if properly conducted I see no objection to it.

Supposing an International Exhibition is held, and a special Board of Commissioners named by Parliament to conduct it. If a colonial agricultural section was created, could we not, after ascertaining our financial position, pass a vote of funds for the support of that section on the strict understanding that it would be so applied? This course would define our liability as a local society, and keep us within the limit, which as a society we could really afford, besides keeping us within our province. This would be only a sort of limited amalgamation, instead of having a separate Exhibition of our own. In conclusion, allow me to express an opinion that the year fixed, 1879, will give too short a time, even in these rapid times, for an International Exhibition to be arranged, with any probability of its turning out a fair success. And all true Australians would desire that it should be to the entire credit of these colonies—as a carefully got up success.

Yours, &c., S. PARTRIDGE, Accountant.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—The meeting of the Agricultural Society called for Wednesday next, to determine whether the proposed International Exhibition of 1879 shall be held or not, will deal with a question of national importance, which has not had the consideration to which it is entitled.

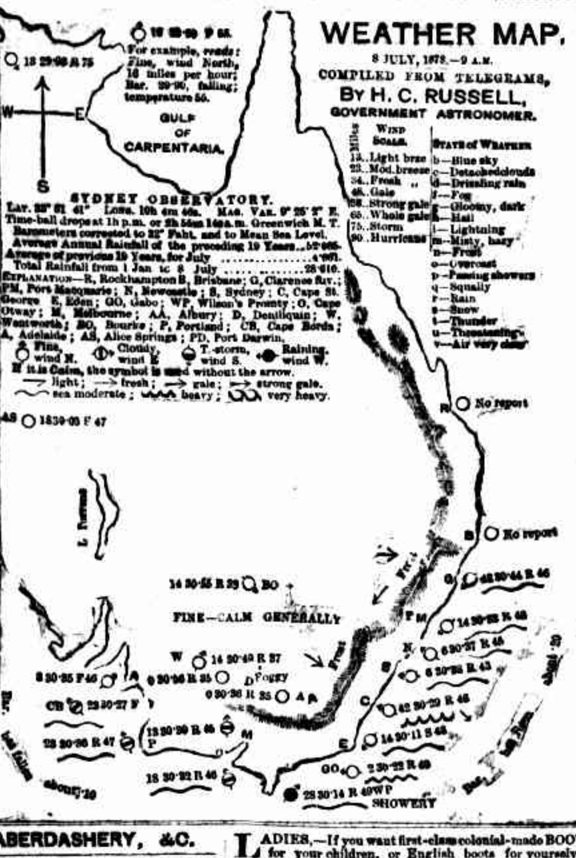

In the first place, has not the project been advanced too far for a backward step? It has been before the public since May, 1877. It was adopted by the Council of the Society and sanctioned by the Government. The annual general meeting of the former heard and adopted the action taken, postponing the date, however, to August, 1879. Months ago the details were published by the Society and circulated far and wide, and the co-operation of probable exhibitors in various foreign countries was invited. Full authority was given to Mr. Jules Joubert to push the affair in Europe, which he has been doing for some months past, and with success. More than that, his Excellency the Governor of this colony, with the advice of the Executive Council, by the publication of the Society's programme in the official Gazette, and the issue of a large number of copies for distribution abroad, has pledged the honour of the country in favour of the movement. His Excellency, with the like advice, has also communicated with the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and the Imperial Government has promised to assist. Foreign Governments have published the notification of the Sydney authorities. Foreign Consuls have asked for further particulars, and have promised the co-operation of the States they represent; and already applications from British manufacturers for space, have been received. In my opinion, all these facts impose upon New South Wales an obligation to hold the Exhibition, from which we cannot retreat without a serious loss of credit, and a burst of ridicule.

And why, after all, should we cast about for excuses to retreat? I fancy the germ of the opposition which has arisen comes from the use of that big word, "international." It is too late in the day to attempt to argue against Exhibitions in general, or those of the Agricultural Society in particular. These shows unite harmoniously the two master principles of modern progress—rivalry and co-operation—for the keener the rivalry for the prizes the greater is the co-operation of exhibitors in promoting the success of the general show. In a young country, with boundless resources but sparse population and deficient appliances, these peaceful tournaments establish a standard of excellence, and supply a stimulant for reaching it, of the highest value, for excellence in production and in the useful arts, is of vast utility in such a land as this. In the abstract, as that is so generally recognised, there can be nothing objectionable in the proposed exhibition, except that it is to be "international." I grant at once that if the term is meant to convey any idea of emulating the immense displays of London, Paris, or Philadelphia the scheme cannot be too quickly dropped. But surely no one, except amongst those who oppose it, can share a notion so grotesque? The proposed show will be held in a colonial dependency with a population of 675,000 souls, at the antipodes of civilization. Every foreign Government and exhibitor knows that, and there will be no imposition. But, Sir, on the other hand, this remote dependency is engrossing a large and rapidly increasing commerce, it contains vast national wealth, and unlimited scope for development of the right sort. Such a country can never be put to shame in an industrial sense, although the backwardness of its inhabitants may be. In a crisis of social pressure, widespread distress, and failing trade, New South Wales and her sister colonies stand before the world as the fairest and soundest daughters of civilization. Their external commerce has advanced with "leaps and bounds," and shows no sign of a pause. In the present state of trade, all the world over, our custom is already worth a great deal, and our prospects make it worth much more. And if ours is the period of childhood, then it is pre-eminently the time for instruction, and who can doubt the instructive effect of a display, as extensive as possible, of the most recent inventions of mechanical science, the most finished models and styles in manufacture; in fine, the latest and most approved appliances for the field, the mine, the factory, and the shop, in this rich and extensive territory? The Victorians, and even the Queenslanders, have determined to hold one of these international shows. We have got a good start—let us keep it. The members of the executive committee of the society, whose province it is to do the work, are prepared to undertake it; and if it should turn out that a grant of public money is necessary to ensure complete success, that grant will, I am confident, be made. The public policy which sets apart vast sums for public education, for immigration, and for our appearance at foreign exhibitions, will devote a small sum in aid of an exposition of our own, which will assemble the first display of Australian products worthy of the name, side by side with the more skilled productions of other lands, which will attract visitors of means and intelligence from foreign nations, and secure an "international" recognition of the resources, the prosperity, and enterprise of New South Wales, which is as truly the "richest" as she is the "oldest" of the Australias.

Your obedient servant,

July 8, 1878. B.

48 FEET to DARLING-STREET, and 132 FEET to ANN-STREET, to a lane, 16 feet wide, to the rear.

BY ORDER OF THE EXECUTORS.

JUST ABOUT THE BEST STAND IN BALMAIN.

GILCHRIST, STUBBS, and WESTON will sell by auction, at the Land Sale Rooms, 273, George-street, on TUESDAY, 16th July, at 11 o'clock,

The whole of that very valuable block of land, at the corner of Darling and Ann streets, on which is erected

THE VOLUNTEER HOTEL, now doing an excellent business, and THREE COTTAGES, all well tenanted, and in excellent order.

THIS PROPERTY HAS A FRONTAGE to DARLING-STREET of 48 FEET, and 132 FEET to ANN-STREET; is one of the VERY BEST POSITIONS in BALMAIN, and forms one of the choicest investments in the district. The HOUSE contains bar and 3 parlours, 4 bedrooms, dry capacious cellar, and has detached kitchen and scullery, with large shed and yard. The GOODWILL of the business alone is worth a large sum, and the stock is to be sold at valuation.

To an energetic proprietor there is a fortune in the house, and independently of the present income there is a considerable frontage available for building.

INTENDING PURCHASERS are requested to inspect the property and judge of its undeniable merits for themselves.

The TITLE is perfect, and can be seen on application to R. W. ROBBERDS, Esq., Solicitor, 159, Castlereagh-street.

IMPORTANT SALE OF BLOOD STOCK, to be held at Holmsten's Hotel, Grafton, on FRIDAY, 12th July, (day after C. R. J. C. Annual Races.)

J. H. MUNRO has received instructions from the undermentioned breeders to sell by public auction, at above Hotel, on FRIDAY, 12th July, at 11 o'clock, the undermentioned stock:—

On account of W. A. B. Greaves, Esq., of Newbold.

1. Bay horse, Sir Hercules, 5 years, by Old Cossack, dam Sir Hercules Dora. (See Stud Book, vol. iii. of 1873.) Sir Hercules is nominated for City and C. R. J. Club Handicaps
2. Brown horse, Sir Walter, foaled 2nd September, 1875, by Loup Garou, dam Sir Hercules Dora. (See Stud Book, vol. iii. of 1873.) Sir Walter is nominated for Sires and Mares' Produce and Maiden Stakes, C. R. J. C. Races
3. Brown horse, Moonbeam, foaled 28th August, 1875, by Loup Garou, dam Marengo, Marengo out of Beeswing, by Oakover out of Beeswing, by Victor out of Miss Foote, by Glaucus (imported Arab) out of —— by Æther (imported) out of Lady Theresa. (See Stud Book, page 9, vol. iii. of 1873.) Moonbeam untried, but perfectly broken.

On account of J. F. Mackenzie, Esq., of Newbold.

4. Brown horse, Pyalong, foaled 23rd November, 1875, by Loup Garou, dam Ada, Ada by Oakover out of Blink Bonny, Blink Bonny by Glaucus (imported) out of Devilshoof, Devilshoof by Victor out of Old Sydney. Pyalong is nominated for Sires and Mares' Produce Stakes, C. R. J. C. Races.

On account of Fred. A. Small, Esq., of Ulmarra.

5. Warfare, c. c., 1 year old, by Warlike (imported), dam Sagacity, by Happy Land (N.S.W. Stud Book, vol. iii., folio 31); dam Maid of Cangai, by Abdul Raymon (imported Arab) out of Bluebell, by Gohanna (56) out of Quadroon (imported)
6. Don Juan, c c, 1 year old, by Warlike (imported) out of Lady Mary (56), by Victor (120) out of Starling Tear (56), by St. Helliers (56) out of Emeline (56), by Gratis (imported) out of Lady Emily, imported (56)
7. Grand Duke, c c, 1 year old, by Warlike (imported) out of Summerside, by Royalist (imported) out of Black Swan, by Skeleton (imported), 148
8. Lady Jane, b f, 1 year, by Harkaway (late Bullock) out of Countess (31), by Cossack (119) out of Fanny, by Sailor (imported)
9. Van Tromp, br c, 1 year, by Harkaway out of Fanny Cathcart, by Nedjie (imported Arab)
10. Turville, c h, aged, by Sir Hercules (129) out of Gulnare, by Abdul Raymon (imported Arab) out of Lucretia by Memnon, bred by E. Bridges, Esq., of Newbold
11. Fanny Cathcart, c m, aged, by Nedjie (imported Arab), with foal at foot, by Warlike (imported)
12. Summerside, c m, by Royalist out of Black Swan by Skeleton (148), with foal at foot, by Warlike (imported).

The Auctioneer would direct the particular attention of breeders and racing men to this important sale, as it is the intention of the owners to clear them off, and as those of the lot offered are by that celebrated [illegible] Derby winner Loup Garou, the few of whose stock that have already started—viz., Red Riding Hood and F[illegible]—having made a name for themselves in first-class company, must be a guarantee of the great superiority of Loup Garou's stock, and make them well worth looking after. Warlike also, the sire of most of the others, from his grand performances in England, cannot well be beaten as a sire for those wishing to purchase fashionable blood.
